Hello to who it my concern

My name is Joseph Pierro. I went to Western Connecticut State University for Justice and law administration. I'm have been a Bail Bondsmen in the State of Connecticut for the last fifteen years. I have been in the court house for the majority of those years. I've heard arraignments and judges setting bonds every working day.

What you proposing I believe is not the best option for the state of Connecticut.

With my experience of working with this clientele I believe this proposed bill you are putting these communities at a higher risk for use of illegal substances, crime, mortality. These citizens will learn and leverage that there is no punishment for not following up on court dates. That being said, this will ultimately put an significant increase strain on the police force in most communities. The state of Connecticut does not have the budget and sufficient officers to go after these prawn warrants. We will continue to have more citizens with high recidivism in our community putting more individuals in danger.
