BANK OF AMERICA, N.A. v. DAVID GROGINS, EXECUTOR (ESTATE OF ANNA S.
GROGINS), ET AL.
(AC 40325)

DiPentima, C. J., and Sheldon and Pellegrino, Js.

Syllabus

The plaintiff bank, B Co., sought to foreclose a mortgage on certain real property owned by the decedent. Prior to trial, the defendant D, the executor of the decedent's estate and trustee of the decedent's trust, was defaulted for failure to disclose a defense. Thereafter, the trial court granted B Co.'s motion for a judgment of strict foreclosure and rendered judgment thereon. Subsequently, the trial court granted B Co.'s motion to substitute U Co. as the plaintiff. Thereafter, more than twenty days after notice of the underlying judgment, the defendants filed a motion to open the judgment alleging that there was good cause for the default because D had been ill during the pendency of the foreclosure proceedings, which had prevented him from properly defending the action, and that they had a good faith belief that a defense existed, namely, that the loan to the decedent had been made as part of a predatory lending program run by B. Co. Following an evidentiary hearing, the court denied the defendants' motion to open, concluding that the defendants had failed to present sufficient evidence to establish that there was good cause to open the judgment. The court further found that even if good cause had existed, the defendants had been negligent in failing to pursue any defenses that they believed they may have had. On the defendants' appeal to this court, held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to open, the defendants having failed to demonstrate good cause that was not based wholly on the merits of the underlying judgment: at the evidentiary hearing, the defendants focused almost entirely on B Co.'s fraudulent behavior and predatory lending practices, and did not offer any evidence regarding D's alleged illness, which purportedly had prevented D from defending the foreclosure action, or any other evidence to explain their failure to disclose a defense prior to default, and the testimony of the defendants' former attorney provided no justification for their failure to investigate the circumstances of the subject loan prior to the judgment of strict foreclosure; moreover, although the statute (§ 49-15) governing the opening of judgments of strict foreclosure did not require the defendants to demonstrate that they were prevented from making their defenses by mistake, accident, or other reasonable cause, the trial court properly considered all of the evidence before it in determining that it was insufficient to justify opening the judgment, and the court's additional finding that the defendants' negligence had caused their failure to pursue a defense did not vitiate its proper finding that they had failed to demonstrate good cause to open the judgment that was not based wholly on the merits of the judgment.

Action to foreclose a mortgage on certain real property owned by the named defendant et al., and for other relief, brought to the Superior Court in the judicial district of Stamford-Norwalk, where the defendant Malcolm L. Grogins, trustee of the Susan Grogins Trust, et al. were defaulted for failure to appear; thereafter, the named defendant et al. were defaulted for failure to disclose a defense; subsequently, the court, Mintz, J., granted the plaintiff's motion for a judgment of strict foreclosure and rendered judgment thereon; thereafter, U.S. Bank Trust, N.A., was substituted as the plaintiff; subsequently, the court, Hon. Kevin Tierney, judge trial referee, denied the motion to open the judgment of strict foreclosure filed by the named defendant et al., and the named defendant et al. appealed to this court. Affirmed.

DiPENTIMA, C. J. In this foreclosure action, the defendants, David Grogins, executor of the estate of Anna S. Grogins, and David Grogins and Malcolm L. Grogins, trustees of the Susan Grogins Trust,<sup>1</sup> appeal

<sup>1</sup> Bank of America, N.A., and State of Connecticut, Department of Revenue Services—subordinate lien holders to the mortgage from which this foreclosure action arises—were also named as defendants but are not parties to this appeal. Accordingly, we refer to David Grogins, executor of the estate of Anna S. Grogins, and David Grogins and Malcolm L. Grogins, trustees of the Susan Grogins Trust, as the defendants throughout this opinion and individually by name where necessary. Further, all references to David Grogins and Malcolm L. from the trial court's denial of their motion to open the judgment of strict foreclosure rendered in favor of the substitute plaintiff, U.S. Bank Trust, N.A., as trustee for LSF9 Master Participation Trust.<sup>2</sup> On appeal, the defendants argue that the court abused its discretion in denying their motion to open because the court improperly applied the procedural requirements set forth in General Statutes § 52-212<sup>3</sup> and, in so doing, erroneously found that there was no good cause to open the judgment of strict foreclosure. We disagree and, accordingly, affirm the judgment of the trial court.

The following facts and procedural history are relevant to this appeal. On July 30, 2014, Bank of America, N.A., as the original plaintiff, commenced this action against the defendants. According to the allegations in the complaint, the decedent, Anna S. Grogins, "owed Countrywide Bank, FSB [Countrywide] $625,250, as evidenced by a promissory note for said sum," dated July 19, 2007. The note was secured by a mortgage on the premises known as 21 River Ridge Court in Stamford. The mortgagee was identified as Mortgage Electronic Registration, Inc., as nominee for Countrywide. On November 5, 2009, this mortgage was assigned to BAC Home Loan Servicing, LP (BAC), which Bank of America, N.A., subsequently acquired. Prior to Anna S. Grogins' death, the note and mortgage were in default for <sup>2</sup> On January 4, 2016, the original plaintiff, Bank of America, N.A., filed a motion to substitute itself as the plaintiff in this action with U.S. Bank Trust, N.A., as trustee for LSF9 Master Participation Trust. The court, Mintz, J., granted the motion on February 16, 2016.

<sup>3</sup> General Statutes § 52-212 (a) provides: "Any judgment rendered or decree passed upon a default or nonsuit in the Superior Court may be set aside, within four months following the date on which it was rendered or passed, and the case reinstated on the docket, on such terms in respect to costs as the court deems reasonable, upon the complaint or written motion of any party or person prejudiced thereby, showing reasonable cause, or that a good cause of action or defense in whole or in part existed at the time of the rendition of the judgment or the passage of the decree, and that the plaintiff or defendant was prevented by mistake, accident or other reasonable cause from prosecuting the action or making the defense."

nonpayment of the principal and interest due on October 1, 2010. Anna S. Grogins died on December 16, 2010. The complaint further alleged that David Grogins, executor, “may claim an interest in [the] premises by virtue of being the executor of the estate of Anna S. Grogins,” and that David Grogins and Malcolm L. Grogins, trustees, were the current owners of record.

On April 8, 2015, Malcolm L. Grogins, State of Connecticut, Department of Revenue Services, and Bank of America, N.A., were defaulted for failure to appear. On April 27, 2015, the court, Mintz, J., defaulted David Grogins for failure to disclose a defense and rendered judgment of strict foreclosure. The law day was set for July 28, 2015. On July 27, 2015, David Grogins filed for bankruptcy, which stayed the foreclosure proceedings.

Following the termination of the bankruptcy stay, the substitute plaintiff filed a motion to open the judgment, to make new findings, to reenter judgment after termination of the bankruptcy stay and to award additional attorney’s fees and costs. Judge Mintz granted the substitute plaintiff’s motion and set a new law day for June 28, 2016.

On June 13, 2016, the defendants filed a motion to open the judgment. The defendants’ motion to open was an official court form, JD-CV-107, that cited General Statutes §§ 52-212, 52-212a, and 52-259c, and Practice Book §§ 17-4 and 17-43. Appended to the defendants’ motion to open was an “explication” that alleged that David Grogins and Malcolm L. Grogins, as individuals, had occupied the residence subject to the foreclosure action since its purchase in the early 2000s. The explication also alleged that David Grogins had been sick intermittently during the pendency of the foreclosure action and that his illness, coupled with “the history of the loan,” constituted “good cause for [why] the defaults [had] occurred . . . .” Further, the defendants asserted that they had a good faith belief that a defense existed to the substitute plaintiff's complaint, specifically, that the subject loan "was part of the [HSSL (High Speed Swim Lane loan program)] at [Bank of America]."

On June 27, 2016, Judge Mintz heard oral argument on the defendants' motion to open and decided that the matter warranted a full hearing before Judge Tierney. Judge Mintz then sua sponte opened the judgment of strict foreclosure and set a new law day for July 19, 2016. Following a brief hearing on July 11, 2016, the court, Hon. Kevin Tierney, judge trial referee, sua sponte opened the judgment of strict foreclosure and set a new law day for August 2, 2016. Shortly thereafter, on July 29, 2016, Judge Tierney held an evidentiary hearing on the defendants' motion to open.

The hearing was held over a series of nonconsecutive days, starting on July 29, 2016, and ending on February 7, 2017. The defendants called several witnesses who testified to matters concerning alleged predatory lending practices and fraudulent behavior during the procurement of the original loan. The defendants did not present any evidence regarding the illness of David Grogins, which purportedly had prevented him from properly defending the foreclosure action, nor did they offer any other evidence to explain their failure to disclose a defense prior to default. Indeed, the attorney who represented David Grogins early on in these proceedings testified at the evidentiary hearing that he did not disclose a defense because, at the time, he had been unaware that any defenses existed.

In a memorandum of decision dated April 5, 2017, Judge Tierney denied the defendants' June 13, 2016 motion to open. In its decision, the court characterized the defendants' claims and arguments as a "[m]oving [t]arget”<sup>4</sup> and concluded that they had failed to present sufficient evidence to support “any semblance of a defense” to the foreclosure action. Further, the court found that the evidence demonstrated that, even if a good defense existed, it was the defendants’ own negligence that occasioned their failure to plead and pursue such a defense. This appeal followed.

On appeal, the defendants claim that the court erred in denying their motion to open by improperly applying § 52-212, which governs opening civil judgments of default and nonsuit, when it should have applied General Statutes § 49-15, which governs opening judgments of strict foreclosure.<sup>5</sup> As a result, the defendants argue, the court incorrectly considered their negligence in failing to plead their defenses in a timely fashion to be a dispositive reason for denying their motion to open. The defendants contend that in seeking to open a judgment of strict foreclosure pursuant to § 49-15, parties need not show that they were prevented from making their defense as a result of “mistake, accident or other reasonable cause,” unlike as required by § 52-212. Accordingly, without conceding that they were negligent in failing to plead their defenses prior to default, the defendants submit that negligence is only one factor that the court should weigh in determining whether to exercise its equitable authority, and that the court’s emphasis on the defendants’ negligence undermines its determination that there was no good cause to open the judgment.<sup>6</sup> We are not persuaded.

<sup>4</sup> In describing the defendants’ claims with this phrase, the court cited the 1949 novel of the same name, “The Moving Target,” written by author Ross Macdonald.

<sup>5</sup> General Statutes § 49-15 (a) (1) provides: “Any judgment foreclosing the title to real estate by strict foreclosure may, at the discretion of the court rendering the judgment, upon the written motion of any person having an interest in the judgment and for cause shown, be opened and modified, notwithstanding the limitation imposed by section 52-212a, upon such terms as to costs as the court deems reasonable, provided no such judgment shall be opened after the title has become absolute in any encumbrancer except as provided in subdivision (2) of this subsection.”

Our review of a trial court's denial of a motion to open a judgment of strict foreclosure, which was filed more than twenty days after notice of the underlying judgment, is narrow.<sup>7</sup> "Generally, an appeal must be filed within twenty days of the date notice of the judgment or decision is given. . . . In the context of an appeal from the denial of a motion to open judgment,

<sup>6</sup> The defendants' motion to open, according to the appended explication, was brought pursuant to Practice Book §§ 17-4 and 17-43 and "all JD-CV-107 criteria." Although the JD-CV-107 form cites several statutes, including § 52-212, it does not include any reference to § 49-15. Indeed, at no time during the evidentiary hearing or at any point prior to this appeal did the defendants argue that their motion to open was made pursuant to § 49-15. Irrespective of the defendants' failure to frame their motion clearly for the court, we address the merits of the defendants' claim.

In addressing the defendants' claim, we note that the substitute plaintiff argues that the defendants should be foreclosed from raising on appeal an error that they induced by failing to cite the correct statute in their motion to open. See Snowdon v. Grillo, 114 Conn. App. 131, 139, 968 A.2d 984 (2009) ("[T]he term induced error, or invited error, has been defined as [a]n error that a party cannot complain of on appeal because the party, through conduct, encouraged or prompted the trial court to make the erroneous ruling. . . . It is well established that a party who induces an error cannot be heard to later complain about that error. . . . This principle bars appellate review of induced nonconstitutional and induced constitutional error. . . . The invited error doctrine rests on principles of fairness, both to the trial court and to the opposing party." [Internal quotation marks omitted.]). We decline to apply the invited error doctrine in this case because it is evident from the court's decision that it understood § 49-15 to control with respect to a motion to open a judgment of strict foreclosure. The court nonetheless applied § 52-212 solely on the basis that the defendants failed to cite the proper statute in their motion or explication. Given the conscious disregard of controlling authority, this is not a circumstance that counsels us to apply the invited error doctrine to avoid unfairness to the trial court. See Hodgate v. Ferraro, 123 Conn. App. 443, 451-52, 3 A.3d 92 (2010) (invited error doctrine barred appellate review of plaintiff's claim that trial court should not have retroactively applied recent Supreme Court decision where plaintiff previously had argued to trial court that precedent should be applied).

<sup>7</sup> The judgment of strict foreclosure was rendered on April 27, 2015, and the defendants filed their motion to open on June 13, 2016.

[i]t is well established in our jurisprudence that [w]here an appeal has been taken from the denial of a motion to open, but the appeal period has run with respect to the underlying judgment, [this court] ha[s] refused to entertain issues relating to the merits of the underlying case and ha[s] limited our consideration to whether the denial of the motion to open was proper. . . . When a motion to open is filed more than twenty days after the judgment, the appeal from the denial of that motion can test only whether the trial court abused its discretion in failing to open the judgment and not the propriety of the merits of the underlying judgment.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Ruggiri, 164 Conn. App. 479, 484, 137 A.3d 878 (2016). “Because opening a judgment is a matter of discretion, the trial court [is] not required to open the judgment to consider a claim not previously raised. The exercise of equitable authority is vested in the discretion of the trial court and is subject only to limited review on appeal.” (Citation omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Countrywide Home Loans Servicing, L.P. v. Peterson, 171 Conn. App. 842, 849, 158 A.3d 405 (2017).

The distinction between a motion to open filed pursuant to § 52-212 and one filed pursuant to § 49-15 was examined previously by our Supreme Court in Farmers & Mechanics Savings Bank v. Sullivan, 216 Conn. 341, 352–53, 579 A.2d 1054 (1990) (Farmers). There, the court explained that “[u]nlike . . . § 52-212, which provides for opening default judgments generally and requires a defaulted defendant to show that he had a good defense that he was prevented from making by mistake, accident or other reasonable cause, § 49-15 prescribes only four conditions for opening a judgment of strict foreclosure: (1) that the motion be in writing; (2) that the movant be a person having an interest in the property; (3) that the motion be acted upon before an encumbrancer has acquired title; and (4) that cause, obviously good cause, be shown for opening the judgment.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id. The court further noted that “[g]ood cause for opening a foreclosure pursuant to § 49-15 . . . cannot rest entirely upon a showing that the original foreclosure judgment was erroneous. Otherwise that statute would serve merely as a device for extending the time to appeal from the judgment.” Id., 356.

In accordance with Farmers, the defendants in this case were required to show good cause for opening the judgment that was not based wholly on the merits of the judgment. Having reviewed the record and the memorandum of decision, we cannot say that the trial court abused its discretion when it found that no good cause existed. As we stated previously, despite alleging in their motion to open that David Grogins failed to defend this action due to an intermittent illness, throughout the several days of testimony, little to no evidence was presented to support this claim. Further, David Grogins, in his capacity as executor and trustee, was represented by counsel when the default was entered against him, and, during the evidentiary hearing on the motion to open, his former attorney offered no justification for the decision not to investigate the circumstances surrounding the July 19, 2007 loan until after judgment of strict foreclosure had been rendered. See USA Bank v. Schulz, 143 Conn. App. 412, 419, 70 A.3d 164 (2013) (“defendant has no basis for claiming an abuse of discretion by the trial court in denying him relief that he could readily have sought, had he wished to, at a time when he was represented by competent counsel”). Although the court did note that the defendants were negligent in failing to pursue any defenses that they believed they may have had, the court also gave consideration to all the evidence presented and found that it was insufficient to justify opening the judgment. Thus, irrespective of the fact that the defendants, in seeking to open the judgment of strict foreclosure, were not required to show that they were prevented by “mistake, accident or other reasonable cause from . . . making [their] defenses,” as the court’s application of § 52-212 suggested, the application of the wrong statute does not vitiate the court’s finding that the defendants failed to show good cause, because that determination is independent of the other procedural requirements set forth in §§ 52-212 and 49-15. See JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A. v. Mendez, 320 Conn. 1, 8, 127 A.3d 994 (2015). Accordingly, the trial court, having properly found that the defendants had failed to show good cause, did not abuse its discretion when it denied the defendants’ motion to open the judgment of strict foreclosure pursuant to § 52-212.

The judgment is affirmed and the case is remanded for the purpose of setting a new law day.

In this opinion the other judges concurred.

CHARLOTTE MALPESO v. PASQUALE MALPESO
(AC 41129)

Keller, Elgo and Moll, Js.

Syllabus

The plaintiff, whose marriage to the defendant previously had been dissolved, appealed to this court from the judgment of the trial court granting motions to modify filed by the defendant and entering modified financial orders. The dissolution judgment had incorporated the parties’ separation agreement, which provided that the defendant would pay the plaintiff $20,000 per month in unallocated alimony and child support, and contained a clause that limited the circumstances under which alimony could be modified. In 2012, the defendant filed a motion to modify alimony and child support, alleging, inter alia, that he was paying the children’s college expenses and that there had been a downturn in his financial circumstances. The plaintiff filed a motion for contempt, alleging, inter alia, that the defendant had failed to comply with the unallocated alimony and child support order from October, 2011 through June, 2012. The trial court granted the defendant’s 2012 motion to modify, converting the unallocated alimony and child support order into a periodic alimony order of $11,138 per month. The court also determined that the modification order would be retroactive but did not set forth clearly the effective date of the modification order. With respect to the motion for contempt, the court determined that the defendant was in wilful and intentional violation of the court orders, and it awarded the plaintiff attorney's fees and costs. The defendant appealed and the plaintiff cross appealed from those decisions to this court, which affirmed the trial court's finding of contempt but reversed the court's financial orders and award of attorney's fees and costs, and remanded the case for further proceedings. This court also concluded that the trial court abused its discretion by failing to enter a clear order as to the retroactivity of the modification order and directed the court, on remand, to resolve the issue of retroactivity after calculating the proper alimony award, if any. In 2014, the defendant filed another motion to modify alimony and child support, which was subsequently amended. The amended motion alleged, inter alia, that there had been a downturn in the defendant's financial circumstances and that his health had deteriorated significantly. In October, 2017, the trial court rendered judgment with respect to, inter alia, the defendant's 2012 and 2014 motions to modify. The court granted the 2012 motion to modify, reducing the defendant's alimony obligation to $7500 per month as of July, 2012, and it granted the 2014 motion to modify, as amended, reducing the defendant's alimony obligation to $4000 per month as of July, 2016. Held:

---

1. The plaintiff could not prevail on her claim that the trial court, in granting the 2012 motion to modify, erroneously determined that the defendant's payment of the children's college expenses constituted a substantial change in circumstances warranting modification of alimony, which was based on her claim that the parties' separation agreement required the defendant to pay the college expenses and contained no express provision permitting the modification of alimony on the basis of the defendant's payment of those expenses: that court did not determine that the defendant's payment of the college expenses alone constituted a substantial change in circumstances and, instead, concluded that the magnitude of the college and related expenses that the defendant had paid constituted a substantial change in circumstances, and although the separation agreement required the defendant to pay for the college expenses, it also provided that alimony was modifiable upon a trial court determining that a substantial change in circumstances had occurred; furthermore, the plaintiff's claim that the trial court failed to consider the entirety of the parties' financial circumstances in granting the 2012 motion to modify was unavailing, as the court concluded that, although the defendant's net monthly income increased in 2012 relative to the time of dissolution, the significant increase in the defendant's expenses and liabilities from the time of dissolution to 2012 constituted a substantial change in circumstances, and the court also set forth findings of fact regarding the plaintiff's age, education, employment history, and employment status.

2. The plaintiff's claim that the trial court erroneously found that the defendant continued to suffer from cellulitis at the time of the proceedings on remand was unavailing: although the defendant's treating physician testified that the defendant currently did not suffer from cellulitis, but that the prior cellulitis had contributed in whole or in part to the disability of the defendant's right leg and that the defendant had a predisposition for recurrent cellulitis, the court's reference to the defendant's "current cellulitis" was not improper, as the court, in using that phrase, was discussing the lasting effects of the defendant's prior cellulitis, of which there was ample evidence in the record, and before referring to the defendant's current cellulitis, the court found that he was at risk for recurrent cellulitis, which belied the suggestion that the court found that he was suffering from an active bout of cellulitis at the time of the proceedings on remand; furthermore, the trial court did not improperly engage in speculation by considering the defendant's risk of developing future medical conditions, and it properly considered the parties' respective financial circumstances in adjudicating the 2014 motion to modify, as amended, as the court considered, inter alia, the defendant's gross monthly income, net monthly income, and monthly expenses in 2012 and in 2017, concluded that the defendant's reduction in income since 2012 and increased expenses, along with his significant health issues, constituted a substantial change in circumstances, and, with respect to the plaintiff, found, inter alia, that she had been unemployed since 2008 and had been living with her parents since January, 2017.
3. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in modifying alimony retroactively under the circumstances of this case:
  - a. The plaintiff could not prevail on her claim that the trial court erred in prohibiting her from offering testimony that was relevant to the court's determination regarding whether to modify the defendant's alimony obligations retroactively, which was based on her claim that the court, by sustaining the objection of the defendant's counsel to the question directed to her concerning the effect of the defendant's contemptuous conduct, improperly denied her the opportunity to testify about the consequences of the defendant's contemptuous conduct and that such testimony would have provided the court with a stronger foundation on which to deny the defendant retroactive modification of his alimony obligations; even if the court abused its discretion by sustaining the objection raised by the defendant's counsel, the plaintiff failed to demonstrate that the alleged error was harmful, as she offered testimony regarding the consequences of the defendant's conduct after the court initially sustained the objection, and the court, in its memorandum of decision, expressly considered the plaintiff's argument that the defendant's conduct had harmed her.

189 Conn. App. 486

489

---

b. The plaintiff's claim that the trial court erred in modifying the defendant's alimony obligations retroactively because the defendant had unclean hands was unavailing; that court, after setting forth the plaintiff's argument in opposition to the retroactive modification of alimony, acknowledged the defendant's arguments raised in support of modifying alimony retroactively, namely, that the plaintiff was in good health yet unemployed, that the plaintiff was eligible to receive reduced social security benefits, that the motions to modify were several years old, and that the defendant had overpaid the plaintiff, and the plaintiff cited to no appellate authority to support her contention that the finding of contempt against the defendant required the court to deny the retroactive modification of alimony.

MOLL, J. In this postjudgment dissolution matter, the plaintiff, Charlotte Malpeso, appeals from the judgment of the trial court, rendered on remand from this court, granting motions to modify filed by the defendant, Pasquale Malpeso, and entering modified financial orders. On appeal, the plaintiff claims that: (1) the court erred in granting the defendant's motion to modify filed on January 25, 2012, because the court (a) improperly determined that the defendant's payment of the college expenses of the parties' children constituted a substantial change in circumstances warranting the modification of alimony and (b) failed to consider the totality of the parties' respective financial circumstances; (2) the court erred in granting the defendant's motion to modify filed on October 10, 2014, as amended, because the court (a) made a clearly erroneous factual finding regarding the defendant's health and engaged in speculation by considering the defendant's risk of developing future medical conditions, and (b) failed to consider the totality of the parties' respective financial circumstances; and (3) the court erred in modifying alimony retroactively.<sup>1</sup> We disagree and, accordingly, affirm the judgment of the trial court.

The following facts and procedural history are relevant to our resolution of the appeal. “The plaintiff . . . married the defendant on August 23, 1986. On June 25, 2004, the marriage was dissolved. At that time, the parties had three minor children: a son, born in 1988; and twin daughters, born in 1993. The judgment of dissolution incorporated the parties’ separation agreement (agreement) that provided, inter alia, that the defendant would pay the plaintiff $20,000 per month in unallocated alimony and child support.<sup>2</sup> The agreement also contained a clause limiting the circumstances in which the amount and term of alimony could be modified.<sup>3</sup> The judgment of dissolution was opened and modified once in December, 2005, to allow the defendant to purchase certain property from the plaintiff.” (Footnotes in original.) *Malpeso v. <sup>2</sup> “The agreement stated in relevant part: ‘3.1 During the lifetime of the [defendant] and until the death, remarriage or cohabitation of the [plaintiff], whichever event shall first occur, the [defendant] shall pay to the [plaintiff] as alimony, or separate maintenance for the support of the minor children the sum of $20,000 per month.’ ” Malpeso v. Malpeso, 165 Conn. App. 151, 155 n.3, 138 A.3d 1069 (2016).

“(a) Upon a court of competent jurisdiction’s determination that the [defendant] has become disabled as defined by the Social Security Administration or in the event that the economy of New York undergoes a substantial change as a result of a catastrophic event (such as 9/11).

In May, 2011, the defendant ceased complying with the $20,000 unallocated alimony and child support order (unallocated order). On May 25, 2011, the defendant filed a motion to modify child support on the basis that the parties' twin daughters would reach the age of majority in June, 2011, and graduate high school at the end of that school year (May, 2011 motion to modify). The plaintiff objected to the May, 2011 motion to modify. Subsequently, the defendant filed an amended motion to modify both alimony and child support, dated August 16, 2011, on the grounds that (1) the parties' twin daughters had reached the age of majority and had graduated from high school and (2) the economy of New York had "undergone a substantial change as a result of a catastrophic event" (August, 2011 amended motion to modify). On August 22, 2011, the trial court, Wenzel, J., sustained in part the plaintiff's objection, ruling that because alimony and child support could be modified only pursuant to paragraph 3.2 of the agreement, the defendant's claim alleging a substantial change in the economy of New York was the sole proper ground for modification that the defendant had raised. On September 6, 2011, the defendant appealed from the August 22, 2011 ruling (2011 appeal).

On January 25, 2012, while the 2011 appeal was pending, the defendant filed another motion to modify alimony and child support (2012 motion to modify). In support of the 2012 motion to modify, the defendant alleged that (1) the parties' three children had reached the age of majority and were no longer residing with the plaintiff, (2) he was paying the children's college expenses,<sup>4</sup> and (3) there had been a downturn in his financial circumstances.

Malpeso v. Malpeso

On June 14, 2012, the plaintiff filed a motion for contempt, alleging, inter alia, that the defendant had failed to comply with the unallocated order from October, 2011 through June, 2012 (2012 motion for contempt). The court, Schofield, J., held multiple hearings between October and December, 2012, to address, inter alia, the defendant's 2012 motion to modify and the plaintiff's 2012 motion for contempt.

On February 19, 2013, this court published its decision resolving the 2011 appeal. See Malpeso v. Malpeso, 140 Conn. App. 783, 60 A.3d 380 (2013). Reversing the August 22, 2011 ruling of the trial court, this court held that the child support encompassed within the unallocated order was not subject to paragraph 3.2 of the agreement that limited only the modification of alimony. Id., 788–89.

Following this court's resolution of the 2011 appeal, Judge Schofield issued several decisions adjudicating, inter alia, the defendant's 2012 motion to modify and the plaintiff's 2012 motion for contempt.<sup>5</sup> In summary, the court granted the 2012 motion to modify, converting the unallocated order into a periodic alimony order of $11,138 per month, which the court calculated by reducing the unallocated order by $8862, the presumptive monthly amount of child support for three children under the child support and arrearage guidelines in effect in 2005. The court determined that the modification order would be retroactive; however, the court did not set forth clearly the effective date of the modification order. In addition, the court concluded that it lacked subject matter jurisdiction to consider the defendant's request to terminate alimony. With respect to the 2012 motion for contempt, the court determined that the defendant was in "wilful and intentional violation of the court orders." As relief, the court ordered the defendant to pay the attorney's fees and costs of the plaintiff in the amount of $41,016.18. Furthermore, after initially ordering the defendant to pay the plaintiff $440,000, the sum of the arrearage from October, 2011 through July, 2013, the court determined that the arrearage had to be recalculated; however, the court did not endeavor to recalculate the arrearage. In 2014, the defendant appealed and the plaintiff cross appealed from Judge Schofield's decisions (2014 appeal and cross appeal).

On October 10, 2014, the defendant filed another motion to modify alimony and child support (2014 motion to modify). In support of the 2014 motion to modify, the defendant alleged that (1) there had been a downturn in his financial circumstances and (2) the plaintiff had sold her residence for a considerable sum and had relocated to a less costly residence.

On May 3, 2016, this court published its decision resolving the 2014 appeal and cross appeal. See Malpeso v. Malpeso, supra, 165 Conn. App. 151. First, this court concluded that the trial court applied the wrong legal standard in calculating the child support component of the unallocated order. Id., 163–74. After giving the trial court guidance regarding how to calculate the child support component of the unallocated order on remand, this court provided the following additional directions: "[T]o determine a new alimony order, after the correct child support amount is deducted from the [unallocated order], the court must subtract that amount from the total amount of [the unallocated order] . . . i.e., subtract the 2004 child support amount from $20,000. The difference represents the 2004 alimony award. Because grounds for modification have been shown . . . the trial court is entitled to consider all the factors, as mandated by . . . [General Statutes §] 46b-82, available in determining the initial award. . . . Consequently, the court must now compare the newly determined 2004 alimony award against the parties' 2012 financial circumstances because the [2012 motion to modify] was before the court in 2012. Finally, because we do not know the impact of the college expenses on the court's analysis in developing a new alimony order on remand, we conclude that the financial mosaic as to alimony must be crafted anew. Accordingly, a new hearing is required to consider the financial issues pertaining to fashioning an alimony order, if any."<sup>6</sup> (Citations omitted; footnote omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 171–74. Second, this court concluded that the trial court abused its discretion by failing to enter a clear order as to the retroactivity of the modification order and directed the court, on remand, to “resolve the issue of retroactivity” after calculating the proper alimony award, if any. Id., 174–78. Third, this court concluded that the trial court erroneously determined that it lacked subject matter jurisdiction to entertain the defendant's claim seeking to modify or terminate alimony. Id., 178–80. Finally, this court upheld the finding of contempt against the defendant for his noncompliance with the unallocated order but concluded that the trial court erred by failing to recalculate the amount of the arrearage owed in relation to the contempt finding and abused its discretion by awarding excessive attorney's fees and costs with respect to <sup>6</sup> “The scope of that hearing is limited. As discussed, when the alimony order is determined from the [unallocated order], the court will need to consider the financial resources of the defendant. This necessarily implicates considering the impact of the college expenses on his ability to pay any new alimony award. . . . This evaluation, however, does not require the court to revisit the college expense order and modify it. Moreover, the limited scope of the hearing, in this case, does not require a court to reconsider long settled property distribution amongst the parties.” (Citation omitted.) *Malpeso v. the 2012 motion for contempt. Id., 180–85. This court directed the trial court, on remand, to recalculate the arrearage. Id., 183. In sum, this court affirmed the trial court’s finding of contempt, but we reversed the court’s financial orders and award of attorney’s fees and costs, and remanded the case for further proceedings. Id., 185.

On July 11, 2016, the defendant submitted a request to amend the 2014 motion to modify, which the court, Colin, J., granted on August 1, 2016. In support of the 2014 motion to modify, as amended, the defendant alleged that (1) there had been a downturn in his financial circumstances, (2) the plaintiff sold her residence for a considerable sum and relocated to a less costly residence, and (3) his health had deteriorated significantly.

Following this court’s remand in the 2014 appeal and cross appeal, the trial court, Diana, J., held hearings from October 16 through 18, 2017, on the following motions: (1) the defendant’s May, 2011 motion to modify; (2) the defendant’s August, 2011 amended motion to modify; (3) the defendant’s 2012 motion to modify; (4) the plaintiff’s 2012 motion for contempt; and (5) the defendant’s 2014 motion to modify, as amended. By way of a memorandum of decision issued on October 26, 2017, the court entered the following orders. First, the court unbundled the unallocated order, determining that the child support component amounted to $3000 and the alimony component amounted to $17,000. Second, the court granted the May, 2011 motion to modify, terminating the defendant’s $3000 monthly child support obligation as of June 30, 2011. Third, the court denied the August, 2011 amended motion to modify. Fourth, the court granted the 2012 motion to modify, reducing the defendant’s alimony obligation to $7500 per month as of July, 2012. Fifth, observing that Judge Schofield’s finding of contempt against the defendant had been affirmed but that the associated award of attorney's fees and costs had been vacated with directions on remand, the court ordered the defendant to pay $4680 in attorney's fees pursuant to General Statutes § 46b-87. Sixth, the court granted the 2014 motion to modify, as amended, reducing the defendant's alimony obligation to $4000 per month as of July, 2016. Finally, the court recalculated the alimony arrearage to be $628,000 and found that, as of October 18, 2017, the defendant had paid the plaintiff $618,627 of the balance due and owing. The court ordered the defendant to pay any payments due to the plaintiff by way of a monthly $1000 alimony payment, unless otherwise agreed to by the parties. The plaintiff moved for reargument of the court's judgment, which the court denied. This appeal followed. Additional facts and procedural history will be set forth as necessary.

We begin by setting forth the applicable standard of review governing our resolution of the plaintiff's claims. "An appellate court will not disturb a trial court's orders in domestic relations cases unless the court has abused its discretion or it is found that it could not reasonably conclude as it did, based on the facts presented. . . . In determining whether a trial court has abused its broad discretion in domestic relations matters, we allow every reasonable presumption in favor of the correctness of its action. . . . Thus, unless the trial court applied the wrong standard of law, its decision is accorded great deference because the trial court is in an advantageous position to assess the personal factors so significant in domestic relations cases . . . . With respect to the factual predicates for modification of an alimony . . . award, our standard of review is clear. . . .

"Appellate review of a trial court's findings of fact is governed by the clearly erroneous standard of review. . . . A finding of fact is clearly erroneous when there is no evidence in the record to support it . . . or when although there is evidence to support it, the reviewing court on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed. . . . Our deferential standard of review, however, does not extend to the court's interpretation of and application of the law to the facts. It is axiomatic that a matter of law is entitled to plenary review on appeal." (Citation omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Fulton v. Fulton, 156 Conn. ## I

We first address the plaintiff's claims regarding the granting of the defendant's 2012 motion to modify. Specifically, the plaintiff asserts that the court (1) improperly determined that the defendant's payment of the children's college expenses constituted a substantial change in circumstances warranting modification of alimony and (2) failed to consider the entirety of the parties' respective financial circumstances.<sup>7</sup> We disagree.

A

The plaintiff claims that the court erroneously determined that the defendant's payment of the children's

<sup>7</sup> The plaintiff raises two additional claims with respect to the 2012 motion to modify that require minimal discussion. First, the plaintiff asserts that, by granting the 2012 motion to modify and reducing her alimony award on the basis of the defendant's payment of the children's college expenses, the court in effect modified the educational support provision of the agreement and made the plaintiff liable for the college expenses. We find no merit in the plaintiff's constrained interpretation of the court's decision.

Second, the plaintiff contends that the defendant, rather than seeking modification of alimony, should have sought modification of the educational support order pursuant to General Statutes § 46b-56c (h) on the basis of his payment of the college expenses. We disagree. Pursuant to the agreement, the defendant was entitled to seek modification of alimony after July 1, 2012, predicated on a substantial change in circumstances. The plaintiff cites to no appellate authority, and we are aware of none, supporting her proposition that the defendant was obligated to seek modification of the educational support order, rather than alimony, on the ground that the college expenses were substantial.

college expenses constituted a substantial change in circumstances warranting modification of alimony. Specifically, the plaintiff asserts that the court's reduction of her alimony award on the ground that the defendant paid the college expenses was improper because the agreement required the defendant to pay the college expenses and contained no express provision permitting the modification of alimony on the basis of the defendant's payment of those expenses. We are not persuaded.

“[General Statutes §] 46b-86 governs the modification or termination of an alimony or support order after the date of a dissolution judgment. When, as in this case, the disputed issue is alimony [or child support], the applicable provision of the statute is § 46b-86 (a),<sup>8</sup> which provides that a final order for alimony may be modified by the trial court upon a showing of a substantial change in the circumstances of either party. . . . Under that statutory provision, the party seeking the modification bears the burden of demonstrating that such a change has occurred. . . . To obtain a modification, the moving party must demonstrate that circumstances have changed since the last court order such that it would be unjust or inequitable to hold either party to it. Because the establishment of changed circumstances is a condition precedent to a party's relief, it is pertinent for the trial court to inquire as to what, if any, new circumstance warrants a modification of the existing order.” (Citation omitted; footnote altered; internal quotation marks omitted.) Olson v. Mohamradu, 310 Conn. 665, 671–72, 81 A.3d 215 (2013).

<sup>8</sup> General Statutes (Rev. to 2011) § 46b-86 (a) provides in relevant part: “Unless and to the extent that the decree precludes modification, any final order for the periodic payment of permanent alimony or support, an order for alimony or support pendente lite or an order requiring either party to maintain life insurance for the other party or a minor child of the parties may, at any time thereafter, be continued, set aside, altered or modified by the court upon a showing of a substantial change in the circumstances of either party . . . .”

In granting the 2012 motion to modify, the court observed that, pursuant to the agreement, the defendant agreed to be “responsible for the costs of undergraduate college . . . for the three minor children.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) The court continued: “In the fall of 2011, the parties’ twin daughters attended the University of Vermont and the George Washington University and, in 2012, their son attended Iona College. The parties do not dispute that these expenses, per child, ranged from $40,000 to $60,000 each year and that they were paid for by the defendant. The parties’ daughters completed college in four years; their son went to college for a fifth year. In total, the defendant paid for thirteen years of college for the three children. Additionally, he paid for their associated expenses of attending college, which they charged on his credit card. . . . The defendant stated that, in just two years, his children charged a total of $130,000. The defendant also paid for tutors; in 2011, his son’s tutor cost $87,500. In the [2012 motion to modify], the defendant asserted a substantial change in circumstances due in part to these college expenses. The defendant claimed . . . that college tuition increased 100 percent since the 2004 dissolution judgment. The magnitude of the college and related payments represents a substantial change in circumstances.” Additionally, at the outset of its memorandum of decision, the court stated that it found the defendant’s testimony to be credible.

The court did not determine that the defendant’s payment of the college expenses alone constituted a substantial change in circumstances; instead, the court, citing the large sums that the defendant had expended in college expenses and the significant increase in the cost of tuition since the time of dissolution, concluded that the magnitude of the college and related expenses that the defendant had paid constituted a substantial change in circumstances. Although the agreement

required the defendant to pay for the college expenses, the agreement also provided that alimony was modifiable after July 1, 2012, upon a trial court determining that a substantial change in circumstances had occurred. As found by the trial court, the considerable cost of the college expenses paid by the defendant was a substantial change in circumstances, a finding we leave undisturbed, and, thus, the court did not err in relying on that ground to modify alimony.<sup>9</sup>

B

The plaintiff also thinly claims that the court failed to consider the entirety of the parties' financial circumstances in granting the 2012 motion to modify. We disagree.

In the 2012 motion to modify, the defendant alleged that there had been a downturn in his financial circumstances. With respect to that assertion, the court made the following findings. In 2012, the defendant's gross monthly income was approximately $90,000 and his net monthly income was approximately $60,000, constituting an increase of approximately $20,000 in the defendant's net monthly income relative to the time of dissolution. Moreover, in 2012, the defendant's monthly expenses totaled $66,000 and his unsecured liabilities totaled over $5,000,000, whereas at the time of dissolution the defendant's monthly expenses totaled $16,800 and his liabilities totaled $964,000. The $5,000,000 in unsecured liabilities was comprised primarily of insurance refund claims. Beginning in 2007, several insurers determined that certain payments made to the defendant, who is a self-employed dentist specializing in dental reconstructive surgery, pursuant to his patients' insurance plans were not covered by the plans and, as a result, the insurers demanded a refund of those payments. Since 2015, this " 'clawback' " action has cost the defendant approximately $1,000,000. Moreover, there is a twenty count action pending against the defendant in New York, sounding in, inter alia, unjust enrichment in relation to the refund claims. The court concluded that the significant increase in the defendant's expenses and liabilities from the time of dissolution to 2012 constituted a substantial change in circumstances.

<sup>9</sup> The plaintiff also claims that, if the defendant's payment of the college expenses warranted a downward modification of alimony, then the court should have increased the plaintiff's alimony award once the defendant had satisfied his obligation to pay the college expenses. The court did not base its decision granting the 2012 motion to modify and reducing the plaintiff's alimony award on the magnitude of the children's college expenses alone; rather, the court also determined that the significant increase in the defendant's expenses and liabilities since the time of dissolution constituted a substantial change in circumstances warranting modification of alimony. Thus, the plaintiff's claim fails.

Additionally, in a prior section of its memorandum of decision setting forth additional findings of fact, the court found that the plaintiff was sixty-two years old, healthy, had a high school degree, studied art history in college for one and one-half years, worked as a flight attendant for ten years, had been unemployed since 2008 following her most recent job selling shoes at a boutique, and had lived with her parents since January, 2017.

At the outset of its memorandum of decision, the court stated that it had considered all of the evidence presented, it had taken judicial notice of the entire court file, and it had found the defendant's testimony credible. Upon our review of the record before us, we conclude that the court properly considered the parties' respective financial circumstances in adjudicating the 2012 motion to modify.

II

We next turn to the plaintiff's claims regarding the judgment of the court granting the defendant's 2014 motion to modify, as amended. Specifically, the plaintiff asserts that the court (1) erroneously found that the

189 Conn. App. 486

---

defendant continued to suffer from cellulitis at the time of the proceedings on remand and improperly engaged in speculation by considering the defendant's risk of developing future medical conditions and (2) failed to consider the entirety of the parties' respective financial circumstances. These contentions are unavailing.

A

The plaintiff asserts that the court erroneously found that the defendant continued to suffer from cellulitis at the time of the proceedings on remand and improperly engaged in speculation by considering the defendant's risk of developing future medical conditions. We are not persuaded.

In his 2014 motion to modify, as amended, the defendant alleged, inter alia, that his health had deteriorated significantly. Specifically, he alleged that: he had been diagnosed with cancer; his prostate was removed in December, 2015, requiring him to be under close medical supervision and causing him to suffer from incontinence; and he suffered from cellulitis,<sup>10</sup> which required him to be hospitalized in 2015 and caused a permanent disability of his right leg.

During the proceedings on remand, the defendant testified that in May, 2015, he developed cellulitis in his right leg, causing him to miss approximately two months of work. He also testified that, although the cellulitis had dissipated after he had been treated with antibiotics, the cellulitis had caused partial numbness in his right leg and, as a result, he no longer drives or performs long surgeries that require him to stand for extended periods of time. Furthermore, the defendant testified that, as a result of the numbness in his leg, he slipped while performing surgery on one of his patients and nicked the patient's nerve with a scalpel that he was holding. The patient subsequently instituted legal proceedings against him. In addition, Angelo Acquista, the defendant's treating physician whose deposition testimony was admitted into evidence in lieu of trial testimony, testified, inter alia, that the defendant currently did not suffer from cellulitis, but that the prior cellulitis had contributed in whole or in part to the disability of the defendant's right leg and that the defendant had a predisposition for recurrent cellulitis. Dr. Acquista also recommended that the defendant retire from his dental practice because his job required him to stand for long periods of time, which predisposed him to develop ailments, such as a pulmonary embolism,<sup>11</sup> which is a potentially life threatening condition.

Against this backdrop, the court made the following relevant findings with respect to the defendant's health. According to Dr. Acquista, the defendant is at risk for recurrent cellulitis. The defendant "is not only predisposed to recurrent cellulitis but is also experiencing the symptoms of his current cellulitis, including abnormal sensations such as swelling and pain, when he stands for a protracted period of time." (Emphasis added.) As a result of the numbness in his leg, the defendant slipped while performing surgery on one of his patients and hit the patient's nerve with a scalpel, which led to the patient commencing legal proceedings against him. The defendant no longer drives or performs long surgeries. Moreover, Dr. Acquista recommended that the defendant retire from his dental practice to avoid developing additional serious medical conditions. The court concluded that the defendant's significant health issues, among other things, constituted a substantial change in circumstances.

The plaintiff asserts that, in light of Dr. Acquista's testimony, the court's finding that the defendant had "current cellulitis" was clearly erroneous. In response, the defendant argues that, in using the phrase "current cellulitis," the court was discussing the lasting effects of the defendant's prior cellulitis, of which there is ample evidence in the record. We agree with the defendant. Although the court referenced the defendant's "current cellulitis," it is evident that the focus of the court's statement was the symptoms that the defendant continued to experience as a result of the prior cellulitis that had afflicted him in 2015. The defendant and Dr. Acquista provided sufficient testimony detailing the consequences of the prior cellulitis on the defendant's current health. In addition, before referring to the defendant's "current cellulitis," the court found that the defendant was at risk for recurrent cellulitis, which belies the suggestion that the court found that the defendant was suffering from an active bout of cellulitis at the time of the proceedings on remand.

We also reject the plaintiff's claim that the court improperly engaged in speculation and conjecture by considering the defendant's risk of developing future medical conditions. Although it is axiomatic that a finder of fact may not engage in speculation or conjecture; Hammel v. Hammel, 158 Conn. App. 827, 834, 120 A.3d 1259 (2015), citing State v. Bharrat, 129 Conn. App. 1, 15, 20 A.3d 9, cert. denied, 302 Conn. 905, 23 A.3d 1243 (2011); the court's findings regarding the defendant's risk of developing future medical conditions, which the plaintiff does not challenge as clearly erroneous, are supported by the evidence in the record. In short, the court did not engage in speculation or conjecture; rather, the court, acting within its proper discretion, considered the defendant's undisputed risk of developing future health problems in concluding that a substantial change in circumstances had occurred on the basis of the defendant's health.

The plaintiff also cursorily claims that the court, in granting the 2014 motion to modify, as amended, failed to consider the entirety of the parties' financial circumstances. We disagree.

In the 2014 motion to modify, as amended, the defendant alleged that there had been a downturn in his financial circumstances. With respect to that claim, the court found as follows. In 2017, the defendant's gross monthly income was $6636, his net monthly income was $5716, and his monthly expenses were $14,900. In 2016, his gross income was $465,000, which largely was comprised of delayed payments he received for prior work he had performed. Earlier in its memorandum of decision, the court had found that, in 2012, the defendant's gross monthly income was approximately $90,000, his net monthly income was approximately $60,000, and his monthly expenses were $66,000. In addition, the defendant's dental practice relies on referrals from other physicians. In the past, the defendant averaged between twenty to twenty-five referrals per month, whereas the defendant averaged between two to three referrals per month at the time of the proceedings on remand. The court concluded that the defendant's reduction in income since 2012 and increased expenses, along with his significant health issues, constituted a substantial change in circumstances. As set forth earlier in this opinion, with respect to the plaintiff, the court found, inter alia, that she had been unemployed since 2008 and had been living with her parents since January, 2017.

We reiterate that, at the outset of its memorandum of decision, the court stated that it had considered all of the evidence presented, it had taken judicial notice of the entire court file, and it had found the defendant's testimony credible. Upon our review of the record before us, we conclude that the court properly considered the parties' respective financial circumstances in adjudicating the 2014 motion to modify, as amended.

III

Finally, we address the plaintiff's claim that, in granting the defendant's 2012 motion to modify and the defendant's 2014 motion to modify, as amended, the court erroneously modified the defendant's alimony obligations retroactively. Specifically, the plaintiff asserts that (1) the court improperly prohibited her from offering testimony relevant to the court's decision regarding whether to modify alimony retroactively, and (2) the defendant, by having been found in contempt for violating the unallocated order, had unclean hands and, thus, was not entitled to retroactive modification of alimony. We are not persuaded.

Pursuant to § 46b-86 (a), "[n]o order for periodic payment of permanent alimony or support may be subject to retroactive modification, except that the court may order modification with respect to any period during which there is a pending motion for modification of an alimony or support order from the date of service of notice of such pending motion upon the opposing party pursuant to section 52-50." "Although there is no bright line test for determining the date of retroactivity of child support [or alimony] payments, this court has set forth factors that may be considered. Specifically, in Hane v. Hane, 158 Conn. App. 167, 176, 118 A.3d 685 (2015)], we expressly noted that a retroactive award may take into account the long time period between the date of filing a motion to modify, or . . . the contractual retroactive date, and the date that motion is heard . . . . The court may examine the changes in the parties' incomes and needs during the time the motion is pending to fashion an equitable award based on those changes." Malpeso v. Malpeso

During the proceedings on remand, the plaintiff argued that, in the event that the court granted the defendant's motions seeking to modify alimony, the defendant was not entitled to retroactive modification of alimony. The plaintiff asserted that the defendant was appearing before the court with unclean hands stemming from his failure to comply with the unallocated order, which resulted in a finding of contempt against him, which this court affirmed. The plaintiff contended that the defendant's "self-help" measures had caused her harm, as she was dependent on the payments made by the defendant pursuant to the unallocated order. Accordingly, the plaintiff argued, it was inequitable to award the defendant retroactive modification of his alimony obligations.

In its memorandum of decision, the court stated in relevant part: "The plaintiff argues that the defendant's self-help measures should not be ignored because [they] caused her harm. Specifically, the defendant left the plaintiff with no income to cover her expenses, and, consequently, she was forced to live off her savings, which are now significantly depleted. The plaintiff is seeking to maintain the order of $20,000 per month from May, 2011 through October, 2017, minus payments made and adjusted by the unbundling of the unallocated order. The defendant argues that the plaintiff never returned to work and is in good health. The plaintiff is eligible to receive social security benefits, though at a reduced rate if taken now rather than waiting until she is eligible to receive full benefits. The defendant reminds the court that these motions were filed five and six years ago, and that the lack of financial relief has caused the defendant to overpay the plaintiff, as he believes he was entitled to a modification." The court proceeded to grant the defendant's 2012 motion to modify and 2014 motion to modify, as amended, and to enter modified alimony orders that were applied retroactively.

A

We first turn to the plaintiff's claim that the court erred in prohibiting her from offering testimony that was relevant to the court's determination regarding whether to modify the defendant's alimony obligations retroactively. This claim is unavailing.

"[T]he trial court has broad discretion in ruling on the admissibility [and relevancy] of evidence. . . . The trial court's ruling on evidentiary matters will be overturned only upon a showing of a clear abuse of the court's discretion. . . . Additionally, before a party is entitled to a new trial because of an erroneous evidentiary ruling, he or she has the burden of demonstrating that the error was harmful. . . . The harmless error standard in a civil case is whether the improper ruling would likely affect the result." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Porter v. Thrane, 98 Conn. App. 336, 342-43, 908 A.2d 1137 (2006).

During the hearings held on remand, the plaintiff's counsel called the plaintiff to testify. During direct examination, the plaintiff's counsel asked the plaintiff to explain how the defendant's noncompliance with the unallocated order had "affect[ed]" her. The defendant's counsel objected, arguing that the plaintiff's counsel improperly was attempting to introduce evidence of the consequential damages of the defendant's contemptuous conduct, which was not germane to the motions before the court. In response, the plaintiff's counsel asserted that the alleged harm suffered by the plaintiff as a result of the defendant's cessation of payments pursuant to the unallocated order was critical for the court to consider in determining whether to modify alimony retroactively. Following a lengthy argument, the court sustained the objection. Notwithstanding the court's ruling, the plaintiff, absent objection, proceeded to testify that, since May, 2011, she had no sources of

income or support other than the defendant's payments under the unallocated order and that, once the defendant had stopped remitting those payments, she was forced to deplete her savings to satisfy her various financial liabilities.

The plaintiff asserts that the court, by sustaining the objection of the defendant's counsel to the question directed to her concerning the effect of the defendant's contemptuous conduct, improperly denied her the opportunity to testify about the consequences of the defendant's contemptuous conduct and that such testimony would have provided the court with a stronger foundation upon which to deny the defendant retroactive modification of his alimony obligations. Assuming, without deciding, that the court abused its discretion by sustaining the objection, the plaintiff has failed to demonstrate that the alleged error was harmful. Although the court initially sustained the objection raised by the defendant's counsel, the plaintiff subsequently offered testimony, absent objection, regarding the consequences of the defendant's conduct. In addition, in its memorandum of decision, the court expressly considered the plaintiff's argument that the defendant's conduct had harmed her. Thus, we reject the plaintiff's claim.

B

We next turn to the plaintiff's claim that the court erred in modifying the defendant's alimony obligations retroactively because the defendant had unclean hands as a result of his violation of the unallocated order, for which he was found in contempt. She asserts that, in light of the substantial damages that she suffered as a result of the defendant's contemptuous conduct, it was inequitable for the court to modify alimony retroactively while awarding her only $4680 in attorney's fees in relation to the 2012 motion for contempt.<sup>12</sup> We disagree.

---

<sup>12</sup> The plaintiff does not claim that the amount of attorney's fees awarded to her in relation to the 2012 motion for contempt was erroneous. We construe her claim on appeal to challenge only the retroactivity of the

189 Conn. App. 486

---

In its memorandum of decision, after setting forth the plaintiff's argument in opposition to the retroactive modification of alimony, the court acknowledged the defendant's arguments raised in support of modifying alimony retroactively, namely, that the plaintiff was in good health yet unemployed, the plaintiff was eligible to receive reduced social security benefits, the motions to modify were several years old, and, on the basis of his belief that he was entitled to a modification of the unallocated order, the defendant had overpaid the plaintiff. The plaintiff cites to no appellate authority, and we are aware of none, to support her contention that the finding of contempt against the defendant required the court to deny the retroactive modification of alimony. We conclude that the court did not abuse its discretion in modifying alimony retroactively under the circumstances of this case.<sup>13</sup>

The judgment is affirmed.

In this opinion the other judges concurred.

modified alimony orders entered in relation to the defendant's 2012 motion to modify and the defendant's 2014 motion to modify, as amended.

<sup>13</sup> The plaintiff also appears to challenge the court's determination that the recalculated alimony arrearage totaled $628,000. Specifically, the plaintiff asserts that the court erroneously found that a $100,000 payment made by the defendant to her in November, 2011, brought the defendant current with respect to the arrearage owed at that time, arguing that she testified during the proceedings on remand that, following the $100,000 payment, there remained a $20,000 arrearage for which the court failed to account. We disagree. In its memorandum of decision, the court found that in November, 2011, the defendant paid the plaintiff $100,000, bringing him current with respect to the arrearage he owed through September, 2011. During the proceedings on remand, the plaintiff testified that, prior to the $100,000 payment, there was a $120,000 arrearage as of October, 2011. Thus, there is no conflict between the plaintiff's testimony and the court's finding.

OF CORRECTION
(AC 41039)

DiPentima, C. J., and Alvord and Eveleigh, Js.

Syllabus

The petitioner, who had been convicted of manslaughter in the first degree with a firearm and carrying a revolver without a permit in connection with the shooting death of the victim, sought a writ of habeas corpus. He claimed that he was deprived of the effective assistance of counsel when, without his knowledge or consent, trial counsel stated during closing argument to the jury that the petitioner bore some responsibility for the victim's death and that the petitioner had been reckless. The petitioner had fatally shot the victim when he put a loaded and cocked handgun to her throat after they had returned home from a night of drinking. The petitioner testified that he and the victim had been arguing and that he had pulled out the gun to calm the victim down, but that the gun discharged. The petitioner thereafter was charged with, inter alia, murder. His trial counsel argued to the jury that although the petitioner was responsible for the victim's death, the shooting was not intentional and might have been the result of the petitioner's reckless behavior, and that the jury should find the petitioner guilty of the lesser included offense of criminally negligent homicide. The petitioner alleged ineffective assistance of trial counsel in his amended petition for a writ of habeas corpus. The habeas court analyzed the claim under the test set forth in Strickland v. Washington (466 U.S. 668) for determining whether a petitioner received ineffective assistance. The court rendered judgment denying the habeas petition, concluding that under Strickland, the petitioner failed to prove both that his trial counsel's performance was deficient and that he was prejudiced by that deficient performance. The court determined that although trial counsel breached his professional duty to consult with the petitioner before arguing to the jury as he did, counsel's actions did not come within the scope of the exception under United States v. Cronin (466 U.S. 648), which relieves a habeas petitioner of having to demonstrate prejudice when his counsel entirely fails to function as an advocate and does not subject the state's case to meaningful adversarial testing. The habeas court granted the petition for certification to appeal, and the petitioner appealed to this court. He claimed that trial counsel's statements to the jury violated his right to client autonomy under the sixth amendment and that the habeas court improperly determined that he had not been denied the effective assistance of counsel as a result thereof. Held:

1. This court declined to consider the petitioner's claim that his trial counsel's conduct violated his sixth amendment right to client autonomy; the petitioner's amended habeas petition did not explicitly or implicitly set forth a claim that his right to client autonomy was violated, all of the alleged constitutional violations in the habeas petition fell within the ambit of the solitary legal claim that was alleged, which was that the petitioner was denied his constitutional right to the effective assistance of counsel, the habeas court conducted its analysis under Strickland and focused solely on the ineffective assistance claim and did not address the right to client autonomy claim, and that court's reasoning supported the interpretation that the petitioner did not plead a violation of the right to client autonomy.

---

2. The habeas court properly determined that the petitioner was not deprived of the right to the effective assistance of counsel:

a. The habeas court properly determined that Strickland, and not Cronic, applied and that the burden of demonstrating prejudice remained with the petitioner; the actions of the petitioner's trial counsel, which were reasonably calculated to further the petitioner's interest in avoiding a conviction of the more serious charge of murder, did not amount to nonrepresentation of the petitioner and, thus, warranted the application of Strickland, under which the petitioner bore the burden to prove that he was prejudiced as a result of any deficient performance by his counsel, and the habeas court properly concluded that trial counsel clearly attempted to perform his duties as the petitioner's legal advocate and that there had been no complete failure of representation.

b. The petitioner's claim that the habeas court improperly concluded that he was not prejudiced by his trial counsel's statements to the jury was unavailing, the petitioner having failed to establish a reasonable probability that the result of the trial would have been different had counsel not made the challenged comments; it was very unlikely that the jury would have reached a different verdict even if the petitioner's trial counsel had not made the challenged comments during closing argument, as there was no dispute that the petitioner shot the victim and caused her death, the question was whether the victim's death was the result of an accident or conduct that rendered the petitioner criminally liable, the trial court instructed the jury on the crime of murder and lesser included offenses, and the state presented significant evidence that supported the jury's verdict of guilty of the lesser included offense of reckless manslaughter in the first degree with a firearm.

DiPENTIMA, C. J. The focus of the petitioner Edwin Leon, Jr.'s, appeal from the judgment of the habeas court denying his petition for a writ of habeas corpus is on the conduct of his criminal trial counsel during closing argument. On appeal, the petitioner claims that (1) that conduct violated his right to client autonomy under the sixth amendment to the United States constitution, and (2) the habeas court improperly determined that the petitioner had not been denied the effective assistance of counsel by that conduct. We conclude that the former was not pleaded or decided by the habeas court and therefore is not properly before this court. With respect to the latter, the petitioner's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel fails, as he did not establish prejudice. Accordingly, we affirm the judgment of the habeas court.

Following a jury trial, the petitioner was convicted of manslaughter in the first degree with a firearm (reckless indifference) in violation of General Statutes §§ 53a-55 (a) (3) and 53a-55a, and carrying a revolver without a permit in violation of General Statutes § 29-35. In affirming the petitioner's conviction, this court set forth the following facts which the jury reasonably could have found. "The [petitioner] and the victim, Krisann Pouliot, had been in a romantic relationship for three years and lived in the home of Pouliot's mother in East Hartford. On May 19, 2012, after a night of drinking and arguing, the [petitioner] and Pouliot returned home where the [petitioner] fatally shot Pouliot in the neck.

The [petitioner] subsequently was arrested and charged in an amended long form information with murder in violation of General Statutes § 53a-54a and carrying a revolver without a permit in violation of § 29-35.

“A jury trial began on September 29, 2013, before the court, Mullarkey, J. The [petitioner] testified as to the following. On the night of the shooting, the [petitioner] and Pouliot drank a bottle of champagne before they left home for downtown Hartford at about 10 p.m. While downtown, the [petitioner] and Pouliot each consumed approximately four to five alcoholic beverages. The [petitioner] stated that when he went to downtown Hartford, he regularly carried a revolver due to incidents that had taken place there previously. The [petitioner] did not have a permit to carry a revolver. At some point while at various clubs in Hartford, the [petitioner] and Pouliot began to argue about the attention that the [petitioner] was paying to other women. Later that evening, the [petitioner] and Pouliot drove home, where the [petitioner] took the gun from the car and brought it upstairs. In their shared bedroom, the [petitioner] and Pouliot continued to argue with escalating intensity. At some point, the [petitioner] pushed Pouliot onto the bed, placed his left hand around her neck, and held his gun to her neck with his right hand. The [petitioner] stated that he pulled out his gun to calm [Pouliot] down. With his left hand still around Pouliot’s neck, the gun discharged and the bullet entered Pouliot’s neck and exited, severing a finger on the [petitioner’s] left hand.

“According to the [petitioner], after shooting Pouliot, he held her for a few minutes as she gasped for breath. The [petitioner] then picked up the gun, put on a sweatshirt, and left the premises without reporting the incident to anyone. The [petitioner] walked to his mother’s house, which took him approximately forty-five minutes, during which time he did not summon help for Pouliot or alert anyone to the shooting. The [petitioner] testified that he never intended to shoot the gun and did not pull the trigger intentionally. After arriving at his mother's home, the [petitioner] told his mother, brother, and the mother of his child what had taken place, at which point the police were called. Matthew Martinelli, an East Hartford firefighter paramedic, testified that upon his arrival, it was immediately clear that Pouliot was not breathing and, after failing to detect a heartbeat, he determined that she was dead. . . .

“During defense counsel's closing argument to the jury, he stated: I suggest again that this was not intentional, and the circumstances surrounding this, I suggest, indicate that it wasn't intentional. I think he panicked after this happened. He should have gotten help immediately, but did not lawyer up, did not run, I mean, not run away, but he ran away from the scene, but he didn't try to run, he didn't flee the state, didn't do any of that, and told everybody who asked what happened. Stupid, maybe reckless, definitely stupid, in fact it's so stupid that I have trouble getting—wrapping my mind around that it was intentional. It was, you just—and the hammer back, carrying a weapon with the hammer back, he had no training, you heard him testify to that, no firearms training, obviously, because the first thing you're taught is, you don't do that, you don't carry a weapon with a round in the chamber, even.

“I'm asking that you consider when you are deliberating that there is a life that was lost and my client is responsible in some way, there's no question about that. The question is, responsible for what of the charges that you'll hear when the judge reads the charge. I suggest that this was an accident. It may have been reckless behavior, but it was not intentional. I'm suggesting that he certainly should be convicted on the gun and on criminally negligent homicide; there is a life lost, but again, in my mind this just does not appear,

With respect to the homicide, the court instructed the jury on the crime of murder, and the lesser included offenses of manslaughter in the first degree with a firearm (intentional), manslaughter in the first degree with a firearm (reckless indifference) and criminally negligent homicide. Id., 531. The petitioner was found not guilty of the murder charge, and guilty of manslaughter in the first degree with a firearm (reckless indifference) and carrying a revolver without a permit. Id. Following the verdict, the court sentenced the petitioner to a total effective term of thirty-one years imprisonment. Id. This court affirmed the petitioner’s conviction on direct appeal.<sup>1</sup> Id., 527–28.

On September 23, 2014, the self-represented petitioner commenced the present action by filing a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. On November 7, 2016, habeas counsel filed an amended petition alleging the single legal claim of ineffective assistance of trial counsel. The habeas court, Sferrazza, J., conducted a two day trial on April 11 and 25, 2017. On October 4, 2017, the habeas court issued a memorandum of decision denying the petition for a writ of habeas corpus.

189 Conn. App. 512

---

The habeas court noted that in the amended petition, the petitioner had alleged that his criminal trial counsel, Attorneys Donald Freeman and Deron Freeman, had provided ineffective assistance. The basis for this allegation was Donald Freeman's concession, without the petitioner's knowledge or consent, during closing argument, that the petitioner bore some responsibility for the victim's death and that the petitioner had been reckless. The court reasoned that a lawyer's acknowledgment of the commission of some aspect of the state's allegations does not amount to ineffective assistance per se. Furthermore, in the absence of exceptional circumstances, the two part test of Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1984), applied to a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel.

The habeas court recognized that, in rare situations, a petitioner is not required to demonstrate prejudice resulting from a lawyer's deficient performance. "If the exceptional circumstances are present, then the holding of United States v. Cronin, 466 U.S. 648, 659, 104 S. Ct. 2039, 80 L. Ed. 2d 657 (1984), controls, and a habeas petitioner is relieved of the burden of proving that defense counsel's concessions actually prejudiced the petitioner."

The habeas court determined that the Cronin exception applies only when counsel entirely fails to function as an advocate and does not subject the state's case to meaningful adversarial testing. The court concluded that Donald Freeman's actions in the present case did not come within the scope of the Cronin exception and, therefore, the petitioner retained "his obligation to demonstrate defense counsel's deficient actions or inactions prejudiced him, as set forth under the second prong of the Strickland standard, before he can prevail."

The habeas court then applied the relevant legal principles to the facts of the present case. First, it set forth

189 Conn. App. 512

the principal issue at the petitioner's criminal trial. "The incontrovertible evidence was that the petitioner's action in placing a loaded pistol against the victim's neck while engaged in a physical tussle resulted in her fatal shooting. The disputed issue was the petitioner's state of mind when he took that action."

Next, the habeas court considered the petitioner's argument that Donald Freeman had conceded his guilt without his consent. The court concluded that Donald Freeman had not informed the petitioner, prior to closing argument, of his intentions to state to the jury that the petitioner's actions of placing a loaded and cocked handgun to the victim's throat during a physical struggle was "definitely stupid and reckless." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) After reviewing the United States Supreme Court's opinion in Florida v. Nixon, 543 U.S. 175, 125 S. Ct. 551, 160 L. Ed. 2d 565 (2004), the habeas court concluded: "The trial advocate's duty, then, is to communicate timely and clearly to the defendant the reasons leading the attorney to acknowledge some responsibility on the part of the client and the benefits expected to accrue from that action. Counsel must consult with a defendant and seriously consider the client's position on the strategy before embarking on the course, but the client's consent is not a prerequisite for such a concession.

"To be clear, the court determines that Attorney Donald Freeman breached the professional duty to consult with the petitioner and receive his input, if any, before arguing as he did . . . . However, that determination does not conclude analysis of the performance prong of the Strickland test. The court must also resolve the question of whether the petitioner has proved, by a preponderance of the evidence, that conceding that the petitioner's reckless behavior contributed causally to the victim's demise falls outside of the broad spectrum of reasonable representation. Of course, the prejudice

189 Conn. App. 512

Leon v. Commissioner of Correction

component of the Strickland criteria also remains to be determined.” (Citation omitted.)

Ultimately, the court concluded that the petitioner had failed to sustain his burden of proving deficient performance by Donald Freeman. It also determined that the petitioner had failed to prove prejudice, the second prong of the Strickland test. Accordingly, the habeas court denied the petition for a writ of habeas corpus. Upon the habeas court’s granting of the petition for certification to appeal, this appeal was filed. Additional facts will be set forth as necessary.<sup>2</sup>

I

The petitioner first claims that his defense counsel’s conduct during closing argument of his criminal trial violated his right to client autonomy under the sixth amendment to the United States constitution. Specifically, he argues that his defense counsel was constitutionally obligated to honor his choice to defend against the criminal charges filed by the state and was not permitted to override the petitioner’s decision. Furthermore, the petitioner contends that this issue rises to the level of structural error and therefore is not subject to harmless error analysis.<sup>3</sup> In his reply brief, the petitioner relies on McCoy v. Louisiana, U.S. , 138

<sup>2</sup> The respondent, the Commissioner of Correction, set forth an alternate ground for affirming the judgment of the habeas court. Specifically, he argues that the petitioner and the habeas court focused solely on the conduct of Attorney Donald Freeman. He further contends that the court never made a factual finding as to whether Attorney Deron Freeman ever consulted with the petitioner and obtained his consent to the strategy employed by Donald Freeman during closing argument. As a result of our conclusions in parts I and II of this opinion, we need not reach the respondent’s alternative grounds for affirmance.

<sup>3</sup> The petitioner also claims that one of the habeas court’s findings of fact was clearly erroneous. In its memorandum of decision, the habeas court stated: “[T]he petitioner testified that if Attorney [Donald] Freeman has discussed this type of concession [that occurred during closing argument] with him, he would have opposed that strategy. He avowed that he rejected a plea offer and chose to have a jury decide his fate. However, he also testified that he would have accepted a plea disposition involving a guilty

S. Ct. 1500, 200 L. Ed. 2d 821 (2018), which was released by the United States Supreme Court after he had filed his principal brief in the present case.

The respondent, the Commissioner of Correction, counters, inter alia, that “[t]he petitioner’s attempt to cast his claim as one of client autonomy, rather than ineffective assistance, is a new invention on appeal which should not be entertained.” Stated differently, the respondent argues that this court should not review the petitioner’s client autonomy claim, as it was neither raised nor decided below, and, instead, we should limit our analysis to the claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, the sole issue presented to and decided by the habeas court. We agree with the respondent.

We begin our discussion with the following additional facts and detailed procedural history. The habeas petition initially filed by the self-represented petitioner specifically set forth a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel.<sup>4</sup> In the operative pleading, the amended petition filed by habeas trial counsel on November 7, 2016, the petitioner alleged a single claim of ineffective assistance of counsel.<sup>5</sup> In his pretrial brief, the petitioner plea to manslaughter [in the] second degree. . . . It appears to the court that Attorney [Donald] Freeman’s summation substantially comported with the petitioner’s position.” (Emphasis omitted.)

The petitioner argues that the court’s finding regarding his willingness to accept a plea bargain was clearly erroneous. We need not reach this claim, given our conclusions in parts I and II of this opinion.

<sup>4</sup>The petitioner identified his claim of an illegal conviction as resulting from ineffective counsel. He further explained: “My lawyer was ineffective. He had a conflict. He argued to my jury that I was guilty of the offense I was convicted of. He never told me he was going to do that. I never agreed to my lawyer[s] tactic. I did not consent to it.”

<sup>5</sup>Specifically, the amended petition for a writ of habeas corpus set forth the following: “Trial counsel’s acts and omissions, as described below, fell below the level of reasonable competence required of criminal defense lawyers within the State of Connecticut. But for counsel’s actions and omissions, it is reasonably probable that the results of Petitioner’s criminal matter would have been different in that Petitioner would not have been convicted of the crimes described herein. As a result of the foregoing, Petitioner is illegally confined by the Respondent for the following reasons:

explained that his criminal trial counsel had employed a tactic that deprived him of certain rights, and by doing so, effectively denied him the right to effective assistance of counsel. In his posttrial brief, the petition again identified his claim as an ineffective assistance of counsel claim.<sup>6</sup>

In its October 4, 2017 memorandum of decision, the habeas court analyzed the petition as raising a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel against Donald Freeman and Deron Freeman. It applied the two-pronged test of Strickland v. Washington, supra, 466 U.S. 687, for determining whether the petitioner had received ineffective assistance of counsel. It did not independently consider whether the petitioner's right to client autonomy had been violated.

In the petitioner's principal brief to this court, he claimed, for the first time, that "[t]his is a case about a criminal defendant's constitutional right to make the basic decisions regarding the objectives of his defense, including his right to choose whether to admit guilt in order to get a lesser sentence or to defend against the [charges], seek an acquittal, and insist that the state

"a. Trial counsel conceded guilt without Petitioner's consent in violation of Petitioner's rights under the Fifth, Sixth, and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, and article first, § 8, of the Connecticut Constitution.

"b. Trial counsel's concession of guilt violated Petitioner's right to plead not guilty, to testify, to have the state prove him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, and effectively denied him the right to assistance of counsel in his chosen plea of not guilty." (Emphasis added.)

<sup>6</sup>Specifically, the petitioner's posttrial brief contains the following statement: "The Petitioner, through counsel, amended the Petition on or around November 7, 2016, raising a claim of ineffective assistance against trial counsel for conceding guilt without the Petitioner's consent in violation of his rights under the Fifth, Sixth, and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, and Article first, § 8, of the Connecticut Constitution, ultimately violating the Petitioner's right to plead not guilty, to testify, to have the state prove him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, and to pursue his chosen plea of not guilty."

prove his commission of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt.” Later, he specifically argued that “[t]his case is not about the ineffective assistance of counsel or about whether an admission of guilt might sometimes be a reasonable strategy. The client’s autonomy, not the lawyer’s competence, is at issue.” (Emphasis added.) As a result of this specific constitutional violation, he requested that this court order a new trial.

After the petitioner had filed his initial brief with this court, the United States Supreme Court issued its decision in McCoy v. Louisiana, supra, 138 S. Ct. 1500. In that case, the defendant, Robert McCoy, was charged with shooting and killing the mother, stepfather, and son of his estranged wife in Louisiana. Id., 1505–1506. A few days later, police in Idaho arrested the defendant and he subsequently was extradited to Louisiana. Id., 1506. A grand jury indicted the defendant on three counts of first degree murder, and the prosecutor provided notice of intent to seek capital punishment. Id. “[The defendant] pleaded not guilty. Throughout the proceedings, he insistently maintained he was out of State at the time of the killings and that corrupt police killed the victims when a drug deal went wrong.” Id.

The defendant initially had been represented by assigned counsel, but after that relationship had broken down irretrievably, his parents hired Attorney Larry English to represent their son. Id. “English eventually concluded that the evidence against [the defendant] was overwhelming and that, absent a concession at the guilt stage that [the defendant] was the killer, a death sentence would be impossible to avoid at the penalty phase.” Id. When, two weeks before the trial, English informed the defendant that he planned to concede that the defendant had committed the killings, the defendant was “‘furious’ . . . .” Id. The defendant specifically instructed English to refrain from making that concession and to pursue an acquittal. Id.

The trial court refused the defendant's request to end English's representation and to obtain a different lawyer. Id. During his opening statement to the jury, English, over the defendant's protest, conceded that the defendant had committed the three murders. Id. During the defendant's testimony, he maintained his innocence; however, during closing argument and at the penalty phase English again conceded to the jury that the defendant had killed the three victims. Id., 1507. The Louisiana Supreme Court affirmed the defendant's conviction, concluding that "[t]he concession was permissible . . . because counsel reasonably believed that admitting guilt afforded [the defendant] the best chance to avoid a death sentence." Id.

The United States Supreme Court concluded that the decision to determine whether the assertion of innocence, rather than avoidance of capital punishment, was the objective of the defense, belonged to the client and not the attorney. Id., 1508. "If, after consultations with English concerning the management of the defense, [the defendant] disagreed with English's proposal to concede [that the defendant] committed three murders, it was not open to English to override [the defendant's] objection. English could not interfere with [the defendant's] telling the jury 'I was not the murderer,' although counsel could, if consistent with providing effective assistance, focus his own collaboration on urging that [the defendant's] mental state weighed against conviction." Id., 1509. Stated differently, "counsel may not admit her client's guilt of a charged crime over the client's intransigent objection to that admission." Id., 1510.

Next, the court distinguished the facts of McCoy from Florida v. Nixon, supra, 543 U.S. 175, because in Nixon, the client had been "generally unresponsive during discussions of trial strategy, and never verbally approved or protested counsel's proposed approach." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) McCoy v. Louisiana, supra, 138 S. Ct. 1509. The court also determined that claims of a violation of a client's autonomy, pursuant to the sixth amendment, are distinct from and not within the analytical framework of Strickland v. Washington, supra, 466 U.S. 668, or United States v. Cronin, supra, 466 U.S. 648. McCoy v. Louisiana, supra, 1510–11. "Here . . . the violation of McCoy's protected autonomy right was complete when the court allowed counsel to usurp control of an issue within McCoy's sole prerogative." Id., 1511. Finally, the court concluded that a violation of a client's sixth amendment autonomy right is not subject to harmless error review and constituted structural error. Id.

In his brief, the respondent argued that the petitioner had raised a "new" claim, distinct from what had been presented to the habeas court. Specifically, he contended that the petitioner had raised an ineffective assistance of counsel claim at the habeas trial. The respondent maintains that it is contrary to our jurisprudence to permit the petitioner to change course for the appellate proceedings and allow him to present a claim that the petitioner's right of autonomy had been violated.<sup>7</sup> Finally, the respondent stated that "[t]he United States Supreme Court did not invent a new theory in McCoy v. Louisiana, [supra, 138 S. Ct. 1500] . . . . Rather, it applied prior holdings on the right of autonomy and agreed with academic writings and state court decisions that a defendant has a right not to have counsel concede guilt over his objection . . . and that a violation of this right is structural error . . . . This autonomy theory was thus available to the petitioner." (Citations omitted.) The petitioner relied on McCoy in his reply brief. We agree with the respondent.

<sup>7</sup> The respondent specifically argued: "Because the petitioner framed his claim as ineffective assistance of counsel, and asserted deficient performance and prejudice, he cannot now reinvent his claim as not about ineffective assistance." (Internal quotation marks omitted.)

“It is well settled that [t]he petition for a writ of habeas corpus is essentially a pleading and, as such, it should conform generally to a complaint in a civil action. . . . The principle that a plaintiff may rely only upon what he has alleged is basic. . . . It is fundamental in our law that the right of a plaintiff to recover is limited to the allegations of his complaint. . . . While the habeas court has considerable discretion to frame a remedy that is commensurate with the scope of the established constitutional violations . . . it does not have the discretion to look beyond the pleadings and trial evidence to decide claims not raised.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Adkins v. Commissioner of Correction, 185 Conn. App. 139, 167, 196 A.3d 1149, cert. denied, 330 Conn. 946, 196 A.3d 326 (2018); see also Nelson v. Commissioner of Correction, 326 Conn. 772, 780–81, 167 A.3d 952 (2017); Rodriguez v. Commissioner of Correction, 131 Conn. App. 336, 351, 27 A.3d 404 (2011), aff’d, 312 Conn. 345, 92 A.3d 944 (2014). “The reason for the rule is obvious: to permit a party to raise a claim on appeal that has not been raised at trial—after it is too late for the trial court or the opposing party to address the claim—would encourage trial by ambush, which is unfair to both the trial court and the opposing party.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Lewis v. Commissioner of Correction, 166 Conn. App. 22, 32, 140 A.3d 414, cert. denied, 323 Conn. 905, 150 A.3d 679 (2016).

We have reviewed the November 7, 2016 amended petition for a writ of habeas corpus, the operative pleading in this case. The sole legal claim alleged therein is the ineffective assistance by the petitioner’s criminal defense lawyers, Attorneys Donald and Deron Freeman. The amended petition further states that the ineffective assistance occurred due to (1) the concession of guilt without the petitioner’s consent in violation of the fifth, sixth and fourteen amendments to the United States

constitution, and article first, § 8, of the Connecticut constitution, and (2) that the concession of guilt violated the petitioner's rights to plead not guilty, to testify, and to have the state prove him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

The amended petition for a writ of habeas corpus does not, explicitly or implicitly, set forth a claim that the petitioner's sixth amendment right to client autonomy was violated by the actions of criminal trial counsel. As the United States Supreme Court made clear in McCoy v. Louisiana, supra, 138 S. Ct. 1510–11, a claimed violation of the right to client autonomy is separate and distinct from one of ineffective assistance of counsel. Here, all of the alleged constitutional violations fell within the ambit of the solitary legal claim alleged in the operative pleading, that is, that the petitioner had been denied his constitutional right to the effective assistance of counsel. “[T]he interpretation of pleadings is always a question of law for the court . . . . The modern trend, which is followed in Connecticut, is to construe pleadings broadly and realistically, rather than narrowly and technically. . . . Although essential allegations may not be supplied by conjecture or remote implication . . . the complaint must be read in its entirety in such a way as to give effect to the pleading with reference to the general theory upon which it proceeded, and do substantial justice between the parties. . . . As long as the pleadings provide sufficient notice of the facts claimed and the issues to be tried and do not surprise or prejudice the opposing party, we will not conclude that the complaint is insufficient to allow recovery.” (Footnote omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Carpenter v. Commissioner of Correction, 274 Conn. 834, 842, 878 A.2d 1088 (2005); see also Practice Book § 23-22.

Additionally, we note that in the habeas court's memorandum of decision, it focused its analysis solely on

the claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, and did not address the claim that the petitioner's right to client autonomy had been violated. The court conducted its legal analysis through the lens of the two prongs of Strickland, performance and prejudice. The habeas court's reasoning supports our interpretation that the petitioner did not plead a violation of the right to client autonomy.

"This court is not bound to consider claimed errors unless it appears on the record that the question was distinctly raised . . . and was ruled upon and decided by the court adversely to the [petitioner's] claim. . . . This court is not compelled to consider issues neither alleged in the habeas petition nor considered at the habeas proceeding . . . ." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Adkins v. Commissioner of Correction, supra, 185 Conn. App. 168–69; see also Thiersaint v. Commissioner of Correction, 316 Conn. 89, 126, 111 A.3d 829 (2015) (appellate review of claims not raised before habeas court would amount to ambush of that court); Hankerson v. Commissioner of Correction, 150 Conn. App. 362, 369, 90 A.3d 368 (well established that appellate courts will not entertain claims not presented to habeas court but raised for first time on appeal), cert. denied, 314 Conn. 919, 100 A.3d 852 (2014). Put differently, "[h]aving not raised [an] issue before the habeas court, [a] petitioner is barred from raising it on appeal." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Walker v. Commissioner of Correction, 176 Conn. App. 843, 846 n.2, 171 A.3d 525 (2017).<sup>8</sup> For these reasons, we decline to consider the merits of the petitioner's claim that his sixth amendment right to client autonomy was violated in this case.

<sup>8</sup> We also note that in the petition for certification to appeal, the petitioner set forth the following issues: "1. Whether the court erred in finding that the Petitioner failed to prove ineffective assistance of counsel. 2. Whether the court erred in finding that there was no structural error or presumed prejudice. 3. Other such error or claims that arise out of a review of the transcripts and other records." Thus, the petitioner did not include a claim

II

The petitioner next claims that the habeas court improperly determined that he had not been denied the effective assistance of counsel. Specifically, he argues that the nature of the claimed deficient performance<sup>9</sup> warranted an application of the Cronic exception and, therefore, prejudice should have been presumed. In the alternative, he claims that he established prejudice, contrary to the conclusion of the habeas court. The respondent counters that the habeas court properly (1) concluded that the prejudice presumption of Cronic did not apply and (2) determined that the petitioner had failed to establish prejudice. We agree with the respondent.

Before addressing the specifics of the petitioner's claim, we identify the relevant legal principles and our standard of review. Criminal defendants have the constitutional right to the effective assistance of counsel at all critical states of criminal proceedings. Salmon v. Commissioner of Correction, 178 Conn. App. 695, 702, 177 A.3d 566 (2017); see also Kellman v. Commissioner that his right to client autonomy had been violated in the petition for certification to appeal from the denial of his petition for a writ of habeas corpus.

<sup>9</sup>The habeas court determined that Attorney Donald Freeman had "breached the professional duty to consult with the petitioner and receive his input, if any, before arguing as he did [during closing argument]." Ultimately, the court concluded that the petitioner had failed to prove that Attorney Donald Freeman's conduct "fell below reasonable professional practice for defense lawyers." On appeal, the petitioner disagreed with this determination by the habeas court, arguing that Attorney Donald Freeman's performance had been deficient.

It is often stated that a habeas petitioner can prevail on a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel if he satisfies both the performance and the prejudice prongs of Strickland. See, e.g., Francis v. Commissioner of Correction, 182 Conn. App. 647, 652, 190 A.3d 985, cert. denied, 330 Conn. 903, 191 A.3d 1002 (2018); Williams v. Commissioner of Correction, 177 Conn. App. 321, 327, 175 A.3d 565, cert. denied, 327 Conn. 990, 175 A.3d 563 (2017). As a result of our conclusion in part II B of this opinion that the petitioner failed to demonstrate prejudice, we need not decide the performance issue. See Williams v. Commissioner of Correction, supra, 327.

of Correction, 178 Conn. App. 63, 69, 174 A.3d 206 (2017) (axiomatic that right to counsel is right to effective assistance of counsel).

“A claim of ineffective assistance of counsel as enunciated in Strickland v. Washington, supra, 466 U.S. 668, consists of two components: a performance prong and a prejudice prong. To satisfy the performance prong . . . the petitioner must demonstrate that his attorney’s representation was not reasonably competent or within the range of competence displayed by lawyers with ordinary training and skill in the criminal law. . . . Our Supreme Court has stated that the performance inquiry must be whether counsel’s assistance was reasonable considering all the circumstances, and that [j]udicial scrutiny of counsel’s performance must be highly deferential. . . .

“An error by counsel, even if professionally unreasonable, does not warrant setting aside the judgment of a criminal proceeding if the error had no effect on the judgment. . . . To satisfy the second prong of Strickland, that his counsel’s deficient performance prejudiced his defense, the petitioner must establish that, as a result of his trial counsel’s deficient performance, there remains a probability sufficient to undermine confidence in the verdict that resulted in his appeal. . . . The second prong is thus satisfied if the petitioner can demonstrate that there is a reasonable probability that, but for that ineffectiveness, the outcome would have been different. . . . In making this determination, a court hearing an ineffectiveness claim [based on counsel’s failure to investigate] must consider the totality of the evidence before the judge or the jury. . . . Some errors will have had a pervasive effect on the inferences to be drawn from the evidence, altering the entire evidentiary picture, and some will have had an isolated, trivial effect. Moreover, a verdict or conclusion only weakly supported by the record is more likely to have been affected by errors than one with overwhelming record support. . . .

“A petitioner’s claim will succeed only if both prongs are satisfied. . . . Unless a [petitioner] makes both showings, it cannot be said that the conviction . . . resulted from a breakdown in the adversary process that renders the result unworkable. . . . A court can find against a petitioner, with respect to a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, on either the performance prong or the prejudice prong, whichever is easier.” (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Kellman v. Commissioner of Correction, supra, 178 Conn. App. 69–70.

In certain circumstances, however, a petitioner is relieved of the burden of proving prejudice. “In United States v. Cronin, [supra, 466 U.S. 659–60], which was decided on the same day as Strickland, the United States Supreme Court elaborated on the following three scenarios in which prejudice may be presumed: (1) when counsel is denied to a defendant at a critical stage of the proceeding; (2) when counsel entirely fails to subject the prosecution’s case to meaningful adversarial testing; and (3) when counsel is called upon to render assistance in a situation in which no competent attorney could do so. Notably, the second scenario constitutes an actual breakdown of the adversarial process, which occurs when counsel completely fails to advocate on a defendant’s behalf. . . .

“The United States Supreme Court has emphasized . . . how seldom circumstances arise that justify a court in presuming prejudice, and concomitantly, in forgoing particularized inquiry into whether a denial of counsel undermined the reliability of a judgment . . . .” (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Taylor v. Commissioner of Correction, 324 Conn. 631, 644–45, 153 A.3d 1264 (2017). Guided by these principles, we address the petitioner’s specific claims in turn.

A

The petitioner first contends that the habeas court should have applied Cronic and presumed prejudice as a result of Donald Freeman's comments to the jury during closing argument. Specifically, he argues that "Freeman's admissions of [the] petitioner's guilt without consulting with [the] petitioner, who would have expressly directed counsel to the contrary, was a paradigm of a breakdown in the adversarial process under Cronic." The respondent counters that the habeas court properly determined that Cronic, and the corresponding presumption of prejudice, did not apply in the present case. We agree with the respondent.

Cronic established a narrow exception to the general two part Strickland test for determining whether a petitioner's constitutional right to the effective assistance of counsel has been violated. See Smith v. Commissioner of Correction, 89 Conn. App. 134, 137, 871 A.2d 1103, cert. denied, 275 Conn. 909, 882 A.2d 676 (2005). "Cronic instructed that a presumption of prejudice applies in certain limited circumstances when although counsel is available to assist the accused during trial, the likelihood that any lawyer, even a fully competent one, could provide effective assistance of counsel is so small that a presumption of prejudice is appropriate . . . . The court explained that no showing of prejudice is required when counsel is either totally absent or prevented from assisting the accused during a critical stage in the proceeding, when counsel entirely fails to subject the prosecution's case to meaningful adversarial testing and when a defendant is denied the right of effective cross-examination. . . . The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has stated that [a]part from these rare instances . . . the Strickland two-part test of ineffectiveness generally applies. . . .

“The exception articulated in Cronic has become known as constructive denial of the assistance of counsel. . . . [C]ourts have been cautious in invoking Cronic’s dictum and its corresponding presumption of ineffectiveness. . . . [T]he [United States Court of Appeals for the] First Circuit has limited Cronic’s reach to extreme cases . . . the rare instance . . . and certain particularly egregious situations . . . . The United States Supreme Court recently emphasized just how infrequently the surrounding circumstances [will] justify a presumption of ineffectiveness . . . . Florida v. Nixon, [supra, 543 U.S. 175].” (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Smith v. Commissioner of Correction, supra, 89 Conn. App. 137–38.

The petitioner does not claim that he was denied counsel at a critical stage or that no competent attorney could have provided assistance in his circumstances; instead, he focuses his argument on the second Cronic scenario, that is, the petitioner’s criminal trial counsel entirely failed to subject the state’s case to meaningful adversarial testing. See, e.g., Hutton v. Commissioner of Correction, 102 Conn. App. 845, 855, 928 A.2d 549, cert. denied, 284 Conn. 917, 931 A.2d 936 (2007); see also Davis v. Commissioner of Correction, 319 Conn. 548, 555, 126 A.3d 538 (2015), cert. denied sub nom. Semple v. Davis, U.S. , 136 S. Ct. 1676, 194 L. Ed. 2d 801 (2016). “[C]ases have emphasized that the second Cronic exception is exceedingly narrow. . . . For it to apply, the attorney’s failure must be complete. . . . [C]ourts have rarely applied Cronic, emphasizing that only non-representation, not poor representation, triggers a presumption of prejudice.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Hutton, supra, 856.

Our Supreme Court has noted that in determining whether Cronic or Strickland applies in a particular case, courts have held “that specific errors in representation, for which counsel can provide some reasonable explanation, are properly analyzed under Strickland. . . . Counsel's complete failure to advocate for a defendant, however, such that no explanation could possibly justify such conduct, warrants the application of Cronic. . . . In the spirit of Bell [v. Cone, 535 U.S. 685, 122 S. Ct. 1843, 152 L. Ed. 2d 914 (2002)], courts have drawn a distinction between maladroit performance and non-performance . . . by applying Cronic in cases where counsel's conduct goes beyond bad, even deplorable assistance and constitutes no representation at all . . . . Put differently, in ineffective assistance of counsel claims, prejudice may be presumed when counsel wasn't really acting as a lawyer at all." (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Davis v. Commissioner of Correction, supra, 319 Conn. 556.

In Davis, after the victim's family members spoke at the sentencing hearing following the petitioner's guilty plea, the prosecutor requested that the court sentence the petitioner to twenty-five years of incarceration, the maximum permitted under the plea. Id., 550–51. "Defense counsel immediately responded as follows: 'Your Honor, I agree with everything that everybody said so far, and I don't think there's anything left to say from my part.'" (Emphasis omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 551.

The issue before our Supreme Court was whether defense counsel's complete agreement with the prosecutor's recommendation regarding the imposition of the maximum sentence, even though the plea agreement contained a provision allowing defense counsel to argue for a lesser sentence, required analysis under Strickland or Cronic. Id., 549–50. It determined that when defense counsel's agreement with the prosecution is reasonably calculated to further the interests of the defendant, courts apply Strickland. Id., 559. Stated differently, the relevant case law demonstrates "a willingness to apply Cronic when counsel agrees with the

prosecution in a way that cannot reasonably be deemed to be in a defendant's interest." Id., 560.

Our Supreme Court concluded that a complete breakdown of the adversarial process had occurred in Davis. Id., 561. It noted that counsel did not advocate for the petitioner at the sentencing hearing, but instead agreed with the state's recommendation that the court impose the maximum sentence. Id. As a result, "defense counsel entirely fail[ed] to subject the prosecution's case to meaningful adversarial testing . . . . Thus, we conclude that defense counsel's forfeiture of his right to argue for a lesser sentence to agree with the prosecutor's recommendation warrants application of Cronic." (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 568.

The present case differs from Davis. Here, the actions of the petitioner's criminal trial counsel were reasonably calculated to further the petitioner's interest in avoiding a conviction of the more serious murder charge and did not amount to nonrepresentation of the petitioner. Thus, these facts and circumstances warrant an application of Strickland, and not Cronic. Accordingly, prejudice is not presumed, but rather the petitioner bore the burden of proving that he had been prejudiced as a result of any deficient performance by Donald Freeman. The habeas court properly concluded that Donald Freeman "clearly attempted to perform his duties as the petitioner's legal advocate throughout the petitioner's criminal trial. There was no complete failure of representation, as required under the Cronic doctrine . . . ." (Internal quotation marks omitted.)

This conclusion is consistent with the reasoning of our Supreme Court in Davis v. Commissioner of Correction, supra, 319 Conn. 555–68, as well as federal case law. See United States v. Thomas, 417 F.3d 1053, 1056–59 (9th Cir. 2005) (Cronic did not apply where

Thus, we conclude that the habeas court properly determined that Strickland, and not Cronic, applied in this case and that the burden of demonstrating prejudice remained with the petitioner.

Finally, the petitioner argues that the habeas court improperly concluded that he had not been prejudiced by Donald's Freeman's statements during closing argument. Specifically, he contends that the challenged comments to the jury eliminated any chance of the jury returning a not guilty verdict or a guilty verdict on the less serious offense of criminally negligent homicide. The respondent counters that the petitioner failed to demonstrate a reasonable probability that, but for Donald's Freeman's statements to the jury, the results of the criminal trial would have been different. We agree with the respondent.

We iterate that “[u]nder the two-pronged Strickland test, a defendant can only prevail on an ineffective assistance of counsel claim if he proves that (1) counsel's performance was deficient, and (2) the deficient performance resulted in actual prejudice. . . . To demonstrate actual prejudice, a defendant must show a reasonable probability that the outcome of the proceeding would have been different but for counsel's errors.” (Citations omitted; emphasis added.) *Davis v. trial, the court instructed the jury, inter alia, as to the crime of murder and the lesser included offenses of manslaughter in the first degree with a firearm (intentional), manslaughter in the first degree with a firearm (reckless indifference) and criminally negligent homicide. *State v. The jury found him guilty of manslaughter in the first degree with a firearm (reckless indifference) in violation of §§ 53a-55 (a) (3)<sup>11</sup> and 53a-55a.<sup>12</sup> reached a verdict other than the one it returned based on this evidence.”

The state presented significant evidence that the petitioner had violated §§ 53a-55 (a) (3) and 53a-55a. The elements of this crime are as follows: “[T]he statute on manslaughter in the first degree . . . provides in relevant part: A person is guilty of manslaughter in the first degree when . . . (3) under circumstances evincing an extreme indifference to human life, he recklessly engages in conduct which creates a grave risk of death to another person, and thereby causes the death of another person. For the defendant to have been found guilty of this offense, the state had to prove beyond a reasonable doubt the following: (1) that the defendant engaged in conduct that created a grave risk of death; (2) that in doing so the defendant acted recklessly; (3) under circumstances evincing an extreme indifference to human life; and (4) the defendant caused the death of the victim. . . . Additionally, the state had to prove that the defendant had the general intent to engage in conduct that created a grave risk of death to another person under circumstances evincing extreme indifference to human life.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Brown, 118 Conn. App. 418, 423, 984 A.2d 86 (2009), cert. denied, 295 Conn. 901, 988 A.2d 877 (2010); see also State v. Tomlin, 266 Conn. 608, 625, 835 A.2d 12 (2003) (setting forth elements of reckless manslaughter in first degree with firearm).

There was evidence that, on the night of the shooting, the petitioner and the victim consumed alcohol and argued while at various nightclubs in Hartford. State v. Leon, supra, 159 Conn. App. 529. After returning home, the argument continued as the two went upstairs to their shared bedroom. Id. There, the petitioner pushed the victim onto the bed, placed his hand around her neck and held the gun to her neck. Id. The petitioner claimed that he undertook these actions in an effort to “ ‘calm’ ” the victim. Id. The gun discharged and a bullet entered and exited the victim’s neck, also severing one of the petitioner’s fingers. Id.

On the basis of this evidence, we agree with the habeas court that it was “very unlikely” that the jury would have reached a different verdict even if Donald Freeman had not made the challenged comments during closing argument. Simply stated, the petitioner failed to carry his burden of demonstrating that it was reasonably likely that the outcome of the trial would have been different. The evidence strongly supported the jury’s verdict with respect to §§ 53a-55 (a) (3) and 53a-55a. See, e.g., Buie v. Commissioner of Correction, 187 Conn. App. 414, 422, 202 A.3d 453, cert. denied, 331 Conn. 905, 202 A.3d 373 (2019). Because the petitioner has not persuaded this court of the reasonable probability that the result of the trial would have been different, we conclude that the habeas court properly determined that the petitioner was not deprived of the right to the effective assistance of counsel.

The judgment is affirmed.

In this opinion the other judges concurred.

MARTIN J. PRAISNER, JR. v. STATE OF CONNECTICUT
(AC 40784)

DiPentima, C. J., and Prescott and Elgo, Js.

Syllabus

The plaintiff, a former member of a special police force maintained by the defendant state of Connecticut for one of its universities, sought, pursuant to statute ([Rev. to 2013] § 53-39a), indemnification from the state for economic losses that he allegedly incurred as a result of a federal criminal action filed against him in his official capacity. The state filed a motion to dismiss, claiming that the action was barred by sovereign immunity and, therefore, that the trial court lacked subject matter jurisdiction. The trial court denied the motion to dismiss, concluding that the action was not barred by the doctrine of sovereign immunity because members of the university's special police force fell within a class of individuals, namely, members of a local police department, who are expressly authorized to bring an action against the state under § 53-39a. Thereafter, the state filed a motion for summary judgment, renewing its claim that the court lacked subject matter jurisdiction due to sovereign immunity, and the plaintiff filed a cross motion for summary judgment as to liability only. The trial court, relying on the law of the case doctrine, denied the state's motion and granted the plaintiff's motion. Following a hearing in damages, the court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff and awarded him certain damages. Subsequently, the trial court rendered a supplemental judgment in which it awarded the plaintiff attorney's fees and costs. On the state's amended appeal to this court, held that the trial court improperly concluded that the plaintiff's action was not barred by the doctrine of sovereign immunity, as that court incorrectly determined that the plaintiff, as a member of the university's special police force, was authorized to bring the action pursuant to § 53-39a: this court, after reviewing the unambiguous text of § 53-39a and its relationship to other statutes, concluded that the plaintiff failed to establish a reasonable basis on which to conclude that his claim for indemnification fell within the waiver of sovereign immunity contained in § 53-39a, as that statute, which identifies certain officers and other classes of persons with exacting precision, contains no reference to members of the university's special police force, which strongly suggested that they do not fall within the narrow scope of the statute, and, unlike § 53-39a, the statute ([Rev. to 2013] § 10a-142, as amended by No. 13-195, § 1, of the 2013 Public Acts), that provides for the establishment of special police forces for public universities of the state, by its plain language specifies particular duties, responsibilities and authority that members of those special police forces share with members of local police departments, thereby recognizing that those entities are distinct, which distinction is underscored by a number of other statutes in which the legislature has differentiated between them; moreover, because our Supreme Court has construed the term "local police department" as used in § 53-39a as implicating governmental, rather than sovereign, immunity, it was difficult to reconcile the plaintiff's undisputed status as a state employee with his contention that he qualified under § 53-39a as a member of a local police department, and common sense persuaded this court that the legislature did not intend state employees like the plaintiff to qualify as members of a local police department; furthermore, given that § 10a-142 (b) expressly identifies certain sections of the General Statutes as ones either applicable or inapplicable to members of such special police forces, but § 53-39a is not mentioned in any manner, if the legislature had intended § 53-39a to apply to members of the university's special police force, it easily could have included that statute among those specifically identified in § 10a-142 (b), but it did not do so, and § 10a-142 (e) contains an indemnification provision that applies specifically to members of the university's special police force without reference to § 53-39a, which suggested that the legislature intended § 10a-142 (e) to govern the indemnification of such members.

Praisner v. State

On appeal, the state contends that the court improperly concluded that the action was not barred by the doctrine of sovereign immunity.<sup>2</sup> We agree and, accordingly, reverse the judgment of the trial court.

The facts are not in dispute. At all relevant times, the state maintained a special police force for Eastern Connecticut State University (university). The plaintiff was a member of that special police force and an employee of the state. While on duty on September 1, 2008, the plaintiff was involved in an incident in which he allegedly “deployed pepper spray against an intoxicated and violent prisoner in a converted Sheetrock coat closet, which was used as a holding cell, and failed to promptly decontaminate the prisoner.” Weeks later, the plaintiff was placed on paid administrative leave by the university. He thereafter applied for a position with the state’s Department of Correction (department) and was hired as a correction officer on August 15, 2009.

On December 1, 2009, the plaintiff was indicted by the federal government and charged with the crimes of conspiracy to violate an individual’s civil rights in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 241 and deprivation of an individual’s civil rights in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 242. Following his arrest, the plaintiff’s employment with the department was terminated. After two federal trials that both resulted in hung juries, the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut on August 10, 2011, granted the government’s motion to dismiss the indictment against the plaintiff.

The plaintiff subsequently demanded reimbursement from the state for economic losses that he allegedly

<sup>2</sup> The state alternatively claims that “[e]ven if sovereign immunity did not bar the plaintiff’s suit . . . the award of damages [ultimately] determined by the trial court would still be erroneous . . .” In light of our conclusion that the court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over the plaintiff’s action, we do not consider the merits of that claim.

incurred as a result of his federal prosecution. When the state declined to do so, the plaintiff commenced the present action. His one count complaint sought indemnification pursuant to § 53-39a “for economic losses sustained . . . as a result of the aforesaid arrest and prosecution, including the payment of any legal fees incurred in pursuing these damages.”<sup>3</sup>

In response, the state moved to dismiss the action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. In the memorandum of law that accompanied that motion, the state acknowledged that § 53-39a “waives the [s]tate’s immunity to liability and suit,” but only with respect to “those individuals who fall within the designated classifications” set forth in that statute. The state then argued that (1) members of the university’s special police force do not fall within the class of individuals who expressly are authorized to bring an action against the state pursuant to § 53-39a and (2) the complaint contained no allegation that the plaintiff had obtained permission from the Claims Commissioner to institute the action for monetary relief. See General Statutes § 4-160.<sup>4</sup> The plaintiff filed an objection to the motion to dismiss, to which the state filed a reply brief.

The court, Hon. Richard M. Rittenband, judge trial referee, heard argument from the parties on March 17, 2014. In an order issued later that day, the court concluded that a member of the university’s special police force “falls under the category of a member of a local police department” as that term is used in § 53-39a. The court therefore denied the motion to dismiss. The state filed a motion to reargue that ruling, which the court denied.

The state then answered the complaint, and the plaintiff filed a certificate of closed pleadings, in which he requested a court trial. On January 13, 2017, the state filed a motion for summary judgment, renewing its claim that the court lacked subject matter jurisdiction due to sovereign immunity. Relying on the law of the case doctrine,<sup>5</sup> the court, Scholl, J., denied that motion. The court at that time also granted the plaintiff's cross motion for summary judgment as to liability only. A hearing in damages followed, at the conclusion of which the court, Pittman, J., rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff "in the amount of $658,849 in lost earnings and benefits . . . ." Approximately one month later, the court rendered a supplemental judgment, in which it awarded the plaintiff $118,196.04 in attorney's fees and costs. This appeal followed.

On appeal, the state claims that the court improperly determined that the plaintiff, as a member of the university's special police force, was authorized to bring the present action in the Superior Court pursuant to § 53-39a. The state argues that because the plaintiff has not established that he falls clearly within any of the classifications of individuals specified therein, sovereign immunity bars his action for monetary relief. We agree.

<sup>5</sup> "The law of the case doctrine expresses the practice of judges generally to refuse to reopen what [already] has been decided . . . . New pleadings intended to raise again a question of law which has been already presented on the record and determined adversely to the pleader are not to be favored. . . . [When] a matter has previously been ruled [on] interlocutorily, the court in a subsequent proceeding in the case may treat that decision as the law of the case, if it is of the opinion that the issue was correctly decided, in the absence of some new or overriding circumstance." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Total Recycling Services of Connecticut, Inc. v. Connecticut Oil Recycling Services, LLC, 308 Conn. 312, 322, 63 A.3d 896 (2013).

At the outset, we note that “[t]he doctrine of sovereign immunity implicates subject matter jurisdiction and is therefore a basis for granting a motion to dismiss. . . . A determination regarding a trial court’s subject matter jurisdiction is a question of law. When . . . the trial court draws conclusions of law, our review is plenary and we must decide whether its conclusions are legally and logically correct and find support in the facts that appear in the record.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Machado v. Taylor, 326 Conn. 396, 403, 163 A.3d 558 (2017).

Our courts “have long recognized the validity of the common-law principle that the state cannot be sued without its consent . . . . A sovereign is exempt from suit, not because of any formal conception or obsolete theory, but on the logical and practical ground that there can be no legal right as against the authority that makes the law on which the right depends.” (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Horton v. Meskill, 172 Conn. 615, 623, 376 A.2d 359 (1977). Rooted in the recognition that subjecting “state and federal governments to private litigation might constitute a serious interference with the performance of their functions and with their control over their respective instrumentalities, funds and property,” the doctrine of sovereign immunity shields the state “from unconsented to litigation, as well as unconsented to liability.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Rocky Hill v. SecureCare Realty, LLC, 315 Conn. 265, 282, 105 A.3d 857 (2015).

In the present case, the plaintiff’s action is one for monetary damages stemming from his criminal prosecution in federal court. To avoid dismissal, the allegations of his complaint, construed in their most favorable light, must establish either that his indemnification action falls clearly within a statutory waiver of sovereign immunity or that the Claims Commissioner had authorized the action. See Nelson v. Dettmer, 305 Conn. 654, 661, 46 A.3d 916 (2012); Babes v. Bennett, 247 Conn. 256, 262, 721 A.2d 511 (1998). Fairly construed, the plaintiff's complaint alleges that, as a member of the university's special police force, he qualifies under the statutory waiver embodied in § 53-39a as a member of a local police department.<sup>6</sup> For its part, the state concedes that § 53-39a is an indemnification statute that constitutes an express legislative waiver of sovereign immunity.<sup>7</sup> The state nonetheless contends that members of the university's special police force do not fall within the narrow class of individuals specified therein.

The issue before us, then, is whether the legislature intended to include such members within the waiver of statutory immunity contained in § 53-39a. That issue presents a question of statutory interpretation, over which our review is plenary. See Graham v. Commissioner of Transportation, 330 Conn. 400, 416, 195 A.3d 664 (2018). The principles that govern such review are well established. "When construing a statute, [o]ur fundamental objective is to ascertain and give effect to the apparent intent of the legislature. . . . In other words, we seek to determine, in a reasoned manner, the meaning of the statutory language as applied to the facts of [the] case, including the question of whether the language actually does apply. . . . In seeking to determine that meaning, General Statutes § 1-2z directs us

<sup>6</sup> The plaintiff has never alleged that he obtained the authorization of the Claims Commissioner to pursue this action for monetary damages. In addition, we emphasize that the plaintiff brought this indemnification action pursuant to § 53-39a, and not General Statutes (Rev. to 2013) § 10a-142 (a). As the plaintiff's counsel confirmed at oral argument on the motion to dismiss, "[h]is indemnification is solely under § 53-39a."

<sup>7</sup> In its principal appellate brief, the state acknowledges that "the statute at issue in this case—[§] 53-39a—is a statutory waiver of sovereign immunity" and that "§ 53-39a contains an express waiver of sovereign immunity . . . ." That position is consistent with the state's assertion in its memorandum of law on its motion to dismiss that § 53-39a "waives the [s]tate's immunity to liability and suit . . . ."

first to consider the text of the statute itself and its relationship to other statutes. If, after examining such text and considering such relationship, the meaning of such text is plain and unambiguous and does not yield absurd or unworkable results, extratextual evidence of the meaning of the statute shall not be considered. . . . When a statute is not plain and unambiguous, we also look for interpretive guidance to the legislative history and circumstances surrounding its enactment, to the legislative policy it was designed to implement, and to its relationship to existing legislation and common law principles governing the same general subject matter . . . .” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id.

We begin with the relevant statutory language. General Statutes (Rev. to 2013) § 53-39a provides: “Whenever, in any prosecution of an officer of the Division of State Police within the Department of Emergency Services and Public Protection, or a member of the Office of State Capitol Police or any person appointed under section 29-18 as a special policeman for the State Capitol building and grounds, the Legislative Office Building and parking garage and related structures and facilities, and other areas under the supervision and control of the Joint Committee on Legislative Management, or a local police department for a crime allegedly committed by such officer in the course of his duty as such, the charge is dismissed or the officer found not guilty, such officer shall be indemnified by his employing governmental unit for economic loss sustained by him as a result of such prosecution, including the payment of attorney’s fees and costs incurred during the prosecution and the enforcement of this section. Such officer may bring an action in the Superior Court against such employing governmental unit to enforce the provisions of this section.” (Emphasis added.)

Section 53-39a delineates four classifications of individuals that expressly are authorized to bring an action against the state: (1) officers of the Division of State Police within the Department of Emergency Services and Public Protection; (2) members of the Office of State Capitol Police; (3) any person appointed under § 29-18 as a special policeman for the State Capitol building and grounds, the Legislative Office Building and parking garage and related structures and facilities, and other areas under the supervision and control of the Joint Committee on Legislative Management; and (4) members of a local police department. Only the fourth class of individuals is at issue in this case.<sup>8</sup>

The term “local police department” is not defined in § 53-39a or elsewhere in the General Statutes. On appeal, the plaintiff notes that the commonly understood meaning of the term “local,” as gleaned from dictionaries, is “relating to place” and “confined to a particular place.” See, e.g., Webster’s Third New International Dictionary (2002) p. 1327. The plaintiff thus argues that the term “local police department” encompasses the university’s special police force, particularly because the General Statutes demarcate the jurisdiction of a special police force as confined to “the geographical limits of the property owned or under the control of” the educational institution. See General Statutes (Rev. 2013) § 10a-142 (a), as amended by No. 13-195, §1, of the 2013 Public Acts.<sup>9</sup> If that construction is correct, it necessarily would encompass persons appointed under

<sup>8</sup> In his complaint, the plaintiff alleges that his employment as a member of the university’s special police force constituted membership in a local police department, thus bringing his action within the fourth class of individuals specified in § 53-39a. In denying the state’s motion to dismiss, the court agreed with that contention.

<sup>9</sup> General Statutes § 10a-142 has been amended on multiple occasions, and now is codified as General Statutes § 10a-156b. Because the plaintiff commenced this action by service of process on July 19, 2013, the operative statute is General Statutes (Rev. to 2013) § 10a-142, as amended by No. 13-195, §1, of the 2013 Public Acts. Unless otherwise indicated, all references to § 10a-142 in this opinion are to that revision.

§ 29-18 as a special policeman for the State Capitol building and grounds, the Legislative Office Building and parking garage and related structures and facilities. The fact that the legislature deemed it necessary to specifically and expressly provide indemnification to that class of persons undermines the plaintiff's broad reading of the term "local police department" in § 53-39a. Although § 53-39a identifies certain officers with exacting precision, it contains no reference whatsoever to members of the university's special police force, which strongly suggests that members of the university's special police force do not fall within the narrow confines of § 53-39a. See DeNunzio v. DeNunzio, 320 Conn. 178, 194, 128 A.3d 901 (2016).

The plaintiff also asserts that members of the university's special police force and members of a municipal police department "are for all intents and purposes identical" and "provide the same full range of services . . . ." <sup>10</sup> We disagree. Unlike § 53-39a, § 10a-142 expressly applies to members of the university's special police force. Titled "Special police forces," § 10a-142 provides for the establishment of special police forces for the public universities of this state, including the <sup>10</sup> In its appellate brief, the plaintiff cites a litany of statutes generally pertaining to local police officers. As the plaintiff's counsel conceded at oral argument before this court, none of those statutes provides a definition of "local police" that includes members of a special police force, nor do those statutes expressly indicate their applicability thereto. Furthermore, none of those statutes pertains to indemnification, the subject of § 53-39a.

In addition, we note that several of the statutes relied on by the plaintiff pertain to training programs administered by the Police Officer Standards and Training Council. See General Statutes (Rev. to 2013) § 7-294a et seq. Significantly, General Statutes (Rev. to 2013) § 7-294a (9) defines "[p]olice officer" as "a sworn member of an organized local police department, an appointed constable who performs criminal law enforcement duties, a special policeman appointed under section 29-18, 29-18a or 29-19 or any member of a law enforcement unit who performs police duties . . . ." (Emphasis added.) That definition appears to encompass members of the university's special police force, as they are members of a law enforcement unit who perform police duties.

university. By its plain language, that statute specifies particular “duties, responsibilities and authority” that members of those special police forces share with members of a “local police department.” General Statutes (Rev. to 2013) § 10a-142, as amended by No. 13-195, §1, of the 2013 Public Acts. In so doing, the statute recognizes that those special police forces and local police departments are distinct entities. That distinction also is underscored by other statutes in which the legislature has differentiated “special police forces” from “local police departments.” See, e.g., General Statutes (Rev. to 2013) § 10a-55a (a) (mandating that “[t]he state police, local police departments and special police forces established pursuant to section 10a-142 shall cooperate with institutions of higher education in preparing [campus crime] reports”). Section 10a-142 further reflects the limited scope of the duties, responsibilities, and authority shared with members of a local police department. See General Statutes (Rev. to 2013) § 10a-142 (a), as amended by No. 13-195, §1, of the 2013 Public Acts (“[t]he members of each special police force shall have the same duties, responsibilities and authority under sections 7-281, 14-8, 54-1f and 54-33a and title 53a as members of a duly organized local police department” [emphasis added]). Had the legislature intended all of chapter 104 of the General Statutes,<sup>11</sup> for example, to apply to members of the university’s special police force, it would not have so circumscribed the duties, responsibilities and authority specified in § 10a-142 (a).

In addition, § 10a-142 (b) provides in relevant part that members of the university’s special police forces “shall . . . be state employees . . . .” See also General Statutes (Rev. to 2013) § 4-141 (in context of claims against state, defining “state officers and employees” to include “every person elected or appointed to or employed in any office, position or post in the state government, whatever such person’s title, classification or function”) For that reason, the plaintiff understandably alleged in his complaint that he was “a state employee” as a result of his employment with the university’s special police force. As a state employee, the plaintiff does not fall within the protections of “the governmental immunity applicable to municipalities”; Westport Taxi Service, Inc. v. Westport Transit District, 235 Conn. 1, 26, 664 A.2d 719 (1995); see also Murphy v. Ives, 151 Conn. 259, 264, 196 A.2d 596 (1963); nor has the plaintiff so argued. Because our Supreme Court has construed the term “local police department” as used in § 53-39a as one implicating governmental, rather than sovereign, immunity; see Martinez v. Dept. of Public Safety, 263 Conn. 74, 87–88, 818 A.2d 758 (2003); it is difficult to reconcile the plaintiff’s undisputed status as a state employee with his contention that he qualifies under § 53-39a as a member of a local police department.<sup>12</sup> Common sense further persuades us that the legislature did not intend state employees like the plaintiff to qualify as members of a local police department. See Longley v. State Employees Retirement Commission, 284 Conn. 149, 171, 931 A.2d 890 (2007) (“[i]t is a fundamental principle of statutory construction that courts must interpret statutes using common sense”); Trumbull v. State, 206 Conn. 65, 80, 537 A.2d 431 (1988) (“[c]ommon sense . . . is a highly significant guide to statutory interpretation”).

<sup>12</sup> In this regard, we note that the legislature in other statutes has utilized the term “local police” as a synonym for municipal law enforcement. See, e.g., General Statutes § 8-265mm (c) (1) (to be eligible for assistance under home purchasing assistance program “an applicant shall . . . [b]e a local police officer employed by a municipal police department on a full-time or part-time basis or a state police officer”); General Statutes § 29-1l (a) (“in the event of any incident involving numerous victims or casualties, the chief or superintendent of the local police department having jurisdiction over the municipality where such incident occurred or, where there is no organized local police department, the commanding officer of the state police troop having jurisdiction over such municipality may notify the Commissioner of Emergency Services and Public Protection of such incident”).

It also is significant that § 10a-142 (b) expressly identifies certain sections of the General Statutes as ones either applicable or inapplicable to members of such special police forces, but § 53-39a is not mentioned in any manner.<sup>13</sup> Had the legislature intended § 53-39a to apply to members of the university’s special police force, it easily could have included that statute among those specifically identified in § 10a-142 (b), but it did not. The precedent of our Supreme Court instructs that “[u]nless there is evidence to the contrary, statutory itemization indicates that the legislature intended the list to be exclusive.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Republican Party of Connecticut v. Merrill, 307 Conn. 470, 492–93, 55 A.3d 251 (2012); see also Feehan v. Marcone, 331 Conn. 436, 472, A.3d (2019) (“[b]ecause [General Statutes] § 9-328 is contained in chapter 149 of the General Statutes, and therefore not in the chapters or sections listed in [General Statutes] § 9-372, the definition . . . contained in § 9-372 (7), by its own unambiguous terms, does not apply to § 9-328”). The legislature’s failure to include § 53-39a among the statutes specified in § 10a-142 (b) is further evidence that it did not intend members of the university’s special police force to fall within the narrow statutory waiver of sovereign immunity contained in § 53-39a. See C. R. Klewin Northeast, LLC v. State, 299 Conn. 167, 177, 9 A.3d 326 (2010).

<sup>13</sup> General Statutes (Rev. to 2013) § 10a-142 (b), as amended by No. 13-195, § 1, of the 2013 Public Acts, provides: “Members of said special police forces shall continue to be state employees and shall be subject to the provisions of chapter 67, and parts III and IV of this chapter. The provisions of part V of chapter 104 and section 7-433c shall not apply to such members.”

Praisner v. State

Section 10a-142 also contains an indemnification provision that applies specifically to members of the university's special police force. It provides in relevant part: "The state shall protect and save harmless any member of the special police forces from financial loss and expense, including reasonable legal fees and costs, if any, arising out of any claim, demand, suit or judgment by reason of the alleged deprivation by such member of any person's civil rights, which deprivation was not wanton, reckless or malicious, provided such member, at the time of such acts resulting in such alleged deprivation, was acting in the discharge of such member's duties or within the scope of such member's employment or under the direction of a superior officer." General Statutes (Rev. to 2013) § 10a-142 (e), as amended by No. 13-195, § 1, of the 2013 Public Acts.

The existence of a statute that specifically provides indemnification to members of special police forces without reference to § 53-39a suggests that the legislature intended § 10a-142 (e) to govern the indemnification of such members. As our Supreme Court has explained: "[W]e repeatedly have stated in seeking to ascertain legislative intent from more than one statutory pronouncement on a particular subject [that] specific terms in a statute covering a given subject matter will prevail over the more general language of the same or another statute that otherwise might be controlling. . . . This oft-stated principle reflects the fact that specific statutory language constitutes a more accurate representation of the legislature's purpose or intent than more general pronouncements concerning the same subject matter." (Citations omitted.) Thibodeau v. Design Group One Architects, LLC, 260 Conn. 691, 713-14, 802 A.2d 731 (2002). The presence of an indemnification provision that specifically pertains to the indemnification of members of the university's special police force counsels against an expansive reading of the term “local police department” in § 53-39a to encompass the plaintiff’s claim for indemnification in the present case. See LaFrance v. Lodmell, 322 Conn. 828, 837–38, 144 A.3d 373 (2016) (court must read statutes together when they relate to same subject matter because legislature presumed to create harmonious and consistent body of law).

Lastly, we are mindful of the particular context in which this issue arises. The plaintiff is a litigant seeking to secure monetary damages from the state. To do so, he must overcome the “strong presumption in favor of the state’s immunity from liability or suit”; Envirotest Systems Corp. v. Commissioner of Motor Vehicles, 293 Conn. 382, 387–88, 978 A.2d 49 (2009); by demonstrating that his claim clearly falls within the narrow scope of a statutory waiver. See, e.g., State v. Lombardo Bros. Mason Contractors, Inc., 307 Conn. 412, 452, 54 A.3d 1005 (2012) (“[t]he scope of [an] exception [to sovereign immunity] is not to be extended, modified, repealed or enlarged in its scope by the mechanics of [statutory] construction” [internal quotation marks omitted]); Housatonic Railroad Co. v. Commissioner of Revenue Services, 301 Conn. 268, 289, 21 A.3d 759 (2011) (statutory waiver of immunity must be narrowly construed and its scope must be confined strictly); Dept. of Public Works v. ECAP Construction Co., 250 Conn. 553, 558, 737 A.2d 398 (1999) (party attempting to bring action under statutory waiver must come clearly within its provisions). On our review of the text of § 53-39a and its relationship to other statutes, we conclude that the plaintiff has not established a reasonable basis on which to conclude that his claim for indemnification falls within the statutory waiver of sovereign immunity contained in § 53-39a. As applied to the facts of this case, the statute is unambiguous, and we, therefore, do not consider extratextual evidence of its meaning. See State v. Josephs, 328 Conn. 21, 26, 176 A.3d 542 (2018).

OF CORRECTION
(AC 40984)

Alvord, Sheldon and Eveleigh, Js.*

Syllabus

The petitioner, who had been convicted of the crimes of murder and criminal possession of a firearm, filed a second petition for a writ of habeas corpus, claiming that he received ineffective assistance from B, the counsel who represented him with respect to his first habeas petition. The habeas court rendered judgment dismissing three counts of the second habeas petition and denying the petition as to the remaining count. On appeal, this court concluded that the habeas court improperly dismissed the claim of ineffective assistance of B in the second habeas petition and remanded the matter for further proceedings. While the appeal in the second habeas matter was pending, the petitioner filed a third petition for a writ of habeas corpus, claiming that his second habeas counsel rendered ineffective assistance. The third habeas petition and the matter on remand concerning the second habeas petition were consolidated. Following a trial, the habeas court rejected the petitioner's claim that B was ineffective in failing to claim that his trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to consult with a certain expert and to object to the admission of certain prior inconsistent statements. From the judgment rendered thereon, the petitioner, on the granting of certification, appealed to this court. Held:

1. The habeas court properly concluded that B did not render ineffective assistance in failing to claim in the petitioner's first habeas action that trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by not consulting a forensic pathologist to reconstruct the crime scene to discredit certain eyewitness testimony; trial counsel investigated the possibility of a crime scene reconstruction by consulting with D, an expert criminalist, who told trial counsel that he could not perform such a reconstruction due to the nature of the evidence available, trial counsel was entitled to rely on D's representation that the crime scene could not be reconstructed and was not required to search for another expert to perform a reconstruction, and because the testimony of the state's medical examiner at the petitioner's criminal trial was consistent with the testimony of the forensic pathologist that the petitioner presented at his habeas trial, the jury had before it the same evidence that presumably would have been revealed by an expert forensic pathologist.

2. The habeas court properly determined that B was not ineffective in failing to claim in the petitioner's first habeas corpus action that trial counsel was ineffective in failing to object to the admission of certain prior inconsistent statements from two witnesses; both trial counsel and B testified at the habeas trial that it was not necessary to object to the admission of evidence simply for the sake of objecting and that the evidence at issue must be viewed within the context of the entire case, trial counsel also testified that he did not object to the admission of the statements at issue because he considered the admission of them beneficial to the petitioner in that they highlighted the lack of credibility of the two witnesses, and the habeas court properly determined that trial counsel's decision not to object to their admission was a reasonable strategic decision based on his assessment that the statements were beneficial to the petitioner.

SHELDON, J. Following the granting of his petition for certification to appeal, the petitioner, John Brewer, appeals from the judgment of the habeas court denying his petition for a writ of habeas corpus alleging ineffective assistance by his prior habeas counsel. On appeal, the petitioner claims that the habeas court erred in rejecting his claim that his prior habeas attorney rendered ineffective assistance by failing to allege that his criminal trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing (1) to consult with a forensic pathologist to reconstruct the crime scene, and (2) to object to the admission into evidence of certain witness statements. We affirm the judgment of the habeas court.

The petitioner was convicted, following a jury trial, of murder in violation of General Statutes § 53a-54a (a) and criminal possession of a firearm in violation of General Statutes (Rev. to 2001) § 53a-217, upon which he ultimately was sentenced to a total effective sentence of sixty years incarceration. His conviction was later affirmed by our Supreme Court on direct appeal. See State v. Brewer, 283 Conn. 352, 927 A.2d 825 (2007).

The Supreme Court set forth the following facts that reasonably could have been found by the jury. "In the early morning hours of December 29, 2001, the victim, Damian Ellis, was with his friends, Damian Wade and Arthur Hall, at the Athenian Diner in Waterbury (diner). The [petitioner] also was present at the diner with a group of friends that included Jason Greene, his brother, Michael Greene, and Gregory Hunter. The victim's group had a verbal altercation with the [petitioner] and Hunter that prompted the restaurant manager to

Brewer v. Commissioner of Correction

eject both groups of men from the diner. The two groups engaged in some additional verbal sparring and then separated once outside the diner.

“The [petitioner’s] group entered a black Lexus sport utility vehicle, driven by Hunter, and was exiting the diner parking lot when Hunter stopped the car in front of the victim, who was standing outside the entrance to the diner. Either Hunter or the victim reinitiated the dispute, and Hunter subsequently exited the vehicle and approached the victim’s group with a knife in his hand. The victim backed away from Hunter, down a ramp on the side of the diner, as the [petitioner] exited the vehicle and moved to the corner of the building near the ramp. The [petitioner] walked up to the victim and shot him twice with a nine millimeter Cobray M-11 semiautomatic pistol. One shot entered the victim’s brain and likely killed him within five seconds.

“Following the shooting, the [petitioner] got back into the Lexus, which was now driven by Jason Greene, and the two men left the scene. The [petitioner] threw the gun out of the car’s window and shortly thereafter exited the vehicle. Jason Greene later directed the police to the area in which the [petitioner] had discarded the murder weapon.” Id., 353–54.

Following his conviction, the petitioner filed his first habeas corpus petition in 2006, in which he was represented by Attorney Walter Bansley III, alleging ineffective assistance of his trial counsel, Attorney John Cizik. The habeas court, Fuger, J., denied his petition and his subsequent petition for certification to appeal. This court dismissed his appeal from the judgment of the habeas court. Brewer v. Commissioner of Correction, 133 Conn. App. 904, 34 A.3d 480, cert. denied, 304 Conn. 910, 39 A.3d 1121 (2012).

The petitioner filed a second habeas corpus action in April, 2010. His amended petition in that action, filed

---

on June 5, 2013, contained four counts, three of which were dismissed by the second habeas court, Kwak, J. The second habeas court denied the petition as to the one remaining count claiming ineffective assistance of appellate counsel on direct appeal. The petitioner appealed from the denial of the petition for certification to appeal, and this court dismissed in part and reversed in part the judgment of the second habeas court. Brewer v. Commissioner of Correction, 162 Conn. App. 8, 22–23, 130 A.3d 882 (2015). This court dismissed the appeal as to the petitioner’s claims of ineffective assistance of trial counsel and prosecutorial impropriety, but concluded that the dismissal of his claim of ineffective assistance of prior habeas counsel was improper and, therefore, remanded that claim to the habeas court for further proceedings in accordance with law. Id. The petitioner did not challenge the denial of his claim of ineffective assistance of appellate counsel.

While the appeal from the second habeas court’s judgment was pending, the petitioner filed a third habeas corpus petition alleging that his second habeas counsel, Attorney Vicki Hutchinson, rendered ineffective assistance. The third habeas corpus petition and the present matter, on remand from this court, were ordered consolidated by the court, Sferrazza, J., upon motion of the petitioner’s current habeas counsel.

On September 5, 2017, following a trial, the habeas court, Hon. John F. Mulcahy, Jr., judge trial referee, filed a memorandum of decision rejecting the petitioner’s claims that his first habeas counsel, Bansley, was ineffective in failing to claim in his first habeas action, that his criminal trial counsel, Cizik, rendered ineffective assistance by failing to consult with a forensic pathologist to reconstruct the crime scene, and failing to object to the admission of prior inconsistent statements by Jason Greene and Michael Greene. The court subsequently granted the petitioner's petition for certification to appeal and this appeal followed.

"The use of a habeas petition to raise an ineffective assistance of habeas counsel claim, commonly referred to as a habeas on a habeas, was approved by our Supreme Court in Lozada v. Warden, 223 Conn. 834, 613 A.2d 818 (1992). In Lozada, the court determined that the statutory right to habeas counsel for indigent petitioners provided in General Statutes § 51-296 (a) includes an implied requirement that such counsel be effective, and it held that the appropriate vehicle to challenge the effectiveness of habeas counsel is through a habeas petition. . . . In Lozada, the court explained that [t]o succeed in his bid for a writ of habeas corpus, the petitioner must prove both (1) that his appointed habeas counsel was ineffective, and (2) that his trial counsel was ineffective. [Id.,] 842. As to each of those inquiries, the petitioner is required to satisfy the familiar two-pronged test set forth in Strickland v. Washington, [466 U.S. 668, 687, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1984)]. First, the [petitioner] must show that counsel's performance was deficient. . . . Second, the [petitioner] must show that the deficient performance prejudiced the defense. . . . Unless a [petitioner] makes both showings, it cannot be said that the conviction . . . resulted from a breakdown in the adversary process that renders the result unreliable. . . . Lozada v. Warden, supra, 842–43. In other words, a petitioner claiming ineffective assistance of habeas counsel on the basis of ineffective assistance of trial counsel must essentially satisfy Strickland twice . . . .

"In any case presenting an ineffectiveness claim, the performance inquiry must be whether counsel's assistance was reasonable considering all the circumstances. . . . Judicial scrutiny of counsel's performance must be highly deferential and courts must indulge a strong

presumption that counsel's conduct falls within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance; that is, the [petitioner] must overcome the presumption that, under the circumstances, the challenged action might be considered sound trial strategy. . . . [S]trategic choices made after thorough investigation of law and facts relevant to plausible options are virtually unchallengeable; [but] strategic choices made after less than complete investigation are reasonable precisely to the extent that reasonable professional judgments support the limitations on investigation. . . . With respect to the prejudice prong, the petitioner must establish that if he had received effective representation by habeas counsel, there is a reasonable probability that the habeas court would have found that he was entitled to reversal of the conviction and a new trial . . . .

“It is well settled that in reviewing the denial of a habeas petition alleging the ineffective assistance of counsel, [t]his court cannot disturb the underlying facts found by the habeas court unless they are clearly erroneous, but our review of whether the facts as found by the habeas court constituted a violation of the petitioner's constitutional right to effective assistance of counsel is plenary.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Adkins v. Commissioner of Correction, 185 Conn. App. 139, 150–52, 196 A.3d 1149, cert. denied, 330 Conn. 946, 196 A.3d 326 (2018).

I

The petitioner first claims on appeal that the habeas court erred in concluding that Bansley did not render ineffective assistance by failing to allege in his first habeas action that Cizik's representation of him was ineffective because he failed to consult with a forensic pathologist to reconstruct the crime scene to discredit the state's case—more specifically, the eyewitness testimony of Gregory Hunter. We disagree.

In addressing this claim, the habeas court set forth the following summation of the evidence adduced at the petitioner's criminal trial. "Evidence presented indicated the shooting occurred on a down slanted ramp off (and to the side of) the stairs leading to and from the doorway of the diner. Hunter acknowledged that the argument inside the diner escalated to the point that his group (Hunter, [the] petitioner, and the two Greenes) and the victim's group (Ellis, AJ, and Damien Wade) were asked by the management to leave—'take it outside.' In his statement to the police, Hunter described the circumstances of the shooting, as follows: 'Once outside the argument got worse and we were yelling at each other. [Ellis] was yelling to me that me and my cousins were all snitches and I was yelling back at him that he was the snitch. We yelled at each other to go meet up at the hill to fight. Then me, the Greenes and [the petitioner] walked to the Lexus and got in and wanted to drive out to go up to Long Hill to fight [Ellis]. I was driving. We were driving up the driveway toward the street and near the entrance on the ramp area I saw [Ellis] and he was yelling at me . . . I got pissed so I stopped the Lexus by the ramp and got out. I walked up the stairs toward [Ellis]. We were face to face on the ramp and . . . [Ellis] was walking backwards down the ramp and I was walking towards him. I had a folding knife out and I was holding it while walking at him. Mike Greene and some other people were trying to hold me back and telling me to chill. I saw [the petitioner] get out of the passenger side of the Lexus walking toward the corner side of the diner and he was holding his gun. [The petitioner's] gun was on a strap that was on his shoulder. Me and [Ellis] were still yelling at each other and we were near the corner of the diner. I could see [the petitioner] walk up to [Ellis] and [the petitioner] shot him in the right side of the head and [Ellis] spun around and started falling backward and

[the petitioner] shot him again in the chest. I saw [the petitioner] run back into the Lexus and Jason [Greene] drove off. Me and Mike went across the street to the gas station and Mike saw some guy he knew and asked him for a ride and he gave us a ride to mother's house. Yesterday morning, [December 29, 2001], when the police came to talk to me I turned over to them the knife I had when I was arguing with [Ellis].'

"Hunter's trial testimony was substantially consistent with his statement to the police. Prior to his testimony, the medical examiner, Dr. Arkady Katsnelson, had testified and the postmortem report was put in evidence; as would be expected, given an obvious concern stemming from frontal entry wounds and right to left trajectories, Hunter was examined closely and extensively by both counsel concerning the positioning of himself and the petitioner at the time of the shooting. He testified on direct: By the time I pulled out my knife, the petitioner 'came from behind him [the victim] and shot him.' Hunter testified the victim was facing him. 'He [the petitioner] came . . . kind of like towards around from his back, like the right side of him.' When asked where he was standing when he heard the gunshots, he answered, 'on the ramp . . . with Ellis . . . looking toward' me. Hunter also stated he could see the gun in the petitioner's hand, a distinctive gun that he had seen the petitioner with earlier that evening.

"On cross, Hunter said that at the time of the first shot, the gun was not pressed up against the side of the victim's head; he estimated that the gun was 'about two or three feet away from [the victim] when first fired. When asked from which side of [the victim] the gun came into view, Hunter answered, '[l]ike towards . . . the back left side of him [the victim].' On redirect, Hunter testified that at the time the shot was fired, the petitioner would have been behind [the victim] to the left. On further examination, Hunter stated that the first shot hit [the victim] in the head, [the victim] spun around, ‘almost right in front of [the petitioner], but at that time, Mike Greene was . . . pulling me away and all I seen . . . was the back of . . . [the victim]’ when I (Hunter) heard the second shot. Hunter was asked ‘as you sit here now, is there any doubt in your mind that [the petitioner] was the one who held the gun and pulled the trigger that fired the shots into [the victim]?’ The response was, ‘No.’

“Dr. Katsnelson testified that the bullet to the head penetrated the victim’s skull from right to left and exited from the rear of the head; the bullet tract is front to back, right to left, and slightly downward. . . . He testified that it is his opinion that there was only one shooter because the gunshot wounds are the same, right to left, and front to back, and the general direction of each bullet track is the same. He believes the two shots were fired within a short period of time because they are basically ‘in the same directions to the head and to the chest cavity;’ he cannot be more specific about the length of time between the two shots, but ‘I can tell because the shots are in the same general directions . . . I believe there was an extremely short interval between the shots.’ Dr. Katsnelson testified that the entry wound to the head was not a contact wound; the muzzle of the gun was not pressed against the victim’s head. He believed the shooter was in front of the victim and ‘the victim’s right side was exposed to the gun.’ Because there was evidence of gun powder stippling on the skin of the head, he believes the victim was shot from a distance of approximately, not exactly, up to six feet—‘[i]n my opinion, it’s approximately in the range of six feet.’ . . .

“Dr. Katsnelson said he thought the shot to the head came from the front, but the shooter could have been on the side of the victim; it could have been from the side, from the front, but not from the back. And, the victim's head could have been turned to the side; '[d]epends on the position of the head in this time when he was shot.' Dr. Katsnelson testified: 'I don't believe that somebody will see a gun [and] not try to turn the head or to move somewhere and he was even in the front of the shooter, probably the victim was trying to somehow instinctively . . . turn his head and received the bullet in the right side.'" (Footnotes omitted.)

At his habeas trial, the petitioner offered the testimony of Dr. Mark Taff, an expert in forensic pathology and crime scene reconstruction, to contradict Hunter's testimony that the petitioner had approached the victim from his rear left side before shooting him in the right side of the head. Taff testified, inter alia: "The bullet passed through the [victim's] head from a right to left direction. The bullet in the chest went from right to left. So, the person who is shooting the victim, assuming it's a freeze-frame position, is going to be most likely somewhere in front of the victim, somewhere to the victim's right." Taff expressed the view that the position of the shooter in front of the victim, slightly to the right, was essentially beyond dispute absent a person, or persons, of extraordinary dexterity.

The habeas court also heard testimony from Cizik, who testified that he considered the possibility of a crime scene reconstruction and, to that end, he consulted with Dr. Peter DeForest, who is a criminalist. At Cizik's request, DeForest examined all of the evidence, read all of the reports and looked at all of the photos in this case. DeForest told Cizik that he was unable to do a reconstruction of the crime scene because there was insufficient physical evidence in the case, and there were too many variables in the evidence that did exist, to do so. For example, the crime scene had not been immediately secured, so there no way to be certain if the shell casings were where they would have been when ejected from the gun, and there was no way to determine where or how the victim fell. DeForest did, however, counsel Cizik on some of the areas to cross-examine the medical examiner, as well as the police officers who processed the evidence at the crime scene. Cizik testified that he did not think it was necessary to consult a forensic pathologist because DeForest advised him fully.

Bansley also testified at the petitioner's habeas trial. Bansley recalled reviewing the trial transcripts in this case and noticing inconsistencies between Hunter's testimony and the physical evidence as interpreted by Katsnelson. He testified that because of those inconsistencies, he conferred with a forensic pathologist, a doctor who he had used in other cases, and who was a former medical examiner in Connecticut. After reviewing the crime scene reports, the pathologist told Bansley that he could not be of any help because there were problems with the crime scene, specifically, as Bansley stated, "things being moved around." Based upon that response, Bansley did not pursue the claim further. Bansley also emphasized that such a claim was immaterial because the petitioner claimed that he was not present when the victim was shot and had proceeded to trial with an alibi defense.

On the basis of the foregoing testimony, and its review of the trial court record, the habeas court rejected the petitioner's claim that Cizik was ineffective in not consulting a forensic pathologist. The court held: "This court has the highest respect for both experts; both Dr. Katsnelson and Dr. Taff have impeccable credentials and years of experience in the field of forensic pathology. Each, according to the evidence, has performed thousands of autopsies. It certainly appears that Dr. Taff agreed with the medical examiner as to the likelihood of movement of victim and shooter while the murder unfolded; as his report states: 'Just the sight of a gun pointed at a human target is enough to trigger a rapid, behavioral response in both the victim . . . and the shooter . . . which would change the spatial relationship between the actors.’ It is the court’s view that what took place on that ramp did not occur in particularly slow motion, or in any sort of a ‘freeze-frame’ manner. It is also the court’s view that in the factual commission of the actual shooting, there are, necessarily, many variables regarding positioning.

“Dr. Taff postulated that an easy manner in which to reconstruct a shooting was to compare the victim to the sun at the center of the universe with the planets (shooters) orbiting around the victim. He testified that such [a] ‘dynamic helps to understand all possible spatial relationships, distances, angles, heights, and movement of the individuals involved.’ However, Dr. Taff observed that ‘in contrast to solid planetary masses, human beings have articulated joints which are flexible and able to bend/change positions and alter body lengths.’ Here, both bullets passed through the victim front to back and right to left; therefore, Dr. Taff testified, ‘the person who is shooting the victim, assuming it’s freeze-frame position, is going to be most likely somewhere in front of the victim, and somewhere to the victim’s right.’ . . .

“Seemingly predicated on an assumption of substantial immobility of shooter and victim, a courtroom demonstration with the doctor as the victim and counsel as the shooter was presented. This claimed demonstrative aid consisted of various scenarios, around four quadrants; in each, either party, the victim or the shooter, was presented as, or presumed to be, stationary. Such, in the court’s view, was not particularly realistic considering the entire evidence, including Hunter’s statement, his testimony, and the statements and testimony of others. The totality of the evidence does not readily lend itself to a brief series of still frames.

189 Conn. App. 556

Brewer v. Commissioner of Correction

---

“It is clear from the evidence that when Hunter jumped out of the Lexus, tempers were flaring; he was armed with a knife and walking at [the victim], with the latter moving backward down the ramp toward the corner of the building. The victim was being pursued by an enraged Hunter, armed with a knife, and, whether known or unknown, someone approaching him from behind with a gun. At the same time, Damian Wade was between the victim and Hunter trying to keep the two apart; also, at the same time, Michael Greene was grabbing Hunter attempting to hold him back. The evidence indicates, indeed, much movement; as the respondent [the Commissioner of Correction] argues, even a minor bend, twist, crouch, or a slight turn could have significant impact on any opinion as to the precise position of the shooter or the victim when the first shot was fired. Thus, there exist innumerable imponderables. Such, in the court’s view, offers reasonable confirmation to what Dr. DeForest related to trial counsel and to what habeas counsel’s forensic pathologist opined: there was not enough physical evidence to do a meaningful reconstruction.

“What Dr. Taff’s report and testimony do is highlight the obvious inconsistency between Dr. Katsnelson’s findings and an isolated portion of Hunter’s statement (and testimony) describing the actual shooting. But, that inconsistency was apparent from the very beginning and was addressed through examination of witnesses at trial, trial counsels’ summations, and postverdict discussions by first habeas counsel with a forensic pathologist. At the criminal trial, the petitioner’s counsel cross-examined Hunter on his version of the shooting and made reference to the inconsistent evidence in summation. The state certainly acknowledged the importance of the issue when, toward the end of its summation, it referred to ‘the physics of this, how it all happens,’ and offered a somewhat plausible explanation. . . . Thus, the issue was neither overlooked nor ignored by counsel. As Attorney Bansley put it, an expert was not needed to know that there was a discrepancy between the Katsnelson findings and part of the Hunter account of the incident.

“From the inception of his representation of the petitioner, and throughout the case, trial counsel, Attorney Cizik, consulted and conferred with his expert, Dr. DeForest, who advised that a crime scene reconstruction was not feasible given the many variables and the dearth of physical evidence. Dr. DeForest remained on in a consulting capacity aiding trial counsel, through his experience and expertise, in the preparation of the case and the cross-examination of witnesses. Neither the evidence nor the record supports any finding of deficient performance on the part of trial counsel in not retaining the services of, or otherwise consulting with, a forensic pathologist relative to the anatomical positioning of shooter and victim.

“Furthermore, the petitioner’s defense in the criminal case, from the very beginning, was grounded on an alibi, as is apparent from the credible testimony of trial and prior habeas counsel before this court, the petitioner’s testimony before the jury, the petitioner’s testimony [in his previous habeas trial], and the presentation of the petitioner’s alibi witness at the criminal trial, David Whitney. It would seem that positioning evidence related to shooter and victim—who was standing where when the gun was fired—is of somewhat questionable materiality, even for impeachment purposes, when the petitioner claims he was not even there. . . .

“Based upon the foregoing, the court concludes that the petitioner has failed to show that Attorneys Cizik and Bansley rendered deficient representation in the criminal trial and the first habeas. Even if the court were to assume deficient performance has been proven, which it has not, the petitioner has not proven that he was prejudiced by such deficient performance by undermining this court's confidence in the outcome of the criminal trial." (Emphasis added; footnotes omitted.)

On appeal, the petitioner claims that Bansley should have claimed, in his first habeas action, that Cizik's representation of him was ineffective because he should have consulted a forensic pathologist to reconstruct the crime scene to undermine Hunter's testimony. We disagree.

"As this court previously has observed, [a] trial attorney is entitled to rely reasonably on the opinion of an expert witness . . . and is not required to continue searching for a different expert. . . . Moreover, it is well established that when a criminal defense attorney consults with an expert in a relevant field who thereafter apprises counsel that he or she cannot provide favorable testimony, counsel is entitled to rely reasonably on [that] opinion . . . and [is] not required to continue searching for a different expert. . . . [T]he selection of an expert witness is a paradigmatic example of the type of strategic choic[e] that, when made after thorough investigation of [the] law and facts, is virtually unchallengeable." (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Nicholson v. Commissioner of Correction, 186 Conn. App. 398, 413–14, 199 A.3d 573 (2018), cert. denied, 330 Conn. 961, 199 A.3d 19 (2019).

Here, Cizik investigated the possibility of a crime scene reconstruction by consulting with DeForest, an expert criminalist. DeForest told Cizik that he could not perform such a reconstruction due to the nature of the evidence available. Cizik was entitled to rely on DeForest's representation that the crime scene could not be reconstructed, and was not required to search for another expert to perform a reconstruction. Moreover, the testimony of the state's medical examiner,

Katsnelson, was consistent with Taff's testimony, so the jury had before it the same evidence that presumably would have been revealed by a forensic pathologist such as Taff. We thus conclude that the habeas court properly concluded that Bansley did not render ineffective assistance in failing to claim in the petitioner's first habeas action that Cizik rendered ineffective assistance to the petitioner in not consulting a forensic pathologist.

II

The petitioner also claims that the habeas court erred in rejecting his claim that Bansley rendered ineffective assistance by failing to claim in the petitioner's first habeas action that Cizik was ineffective by failing to object at trial to the admission, as substantive evidence, of prior inconsistent statements of Jason Greene and Michael Greene. We disagree.

The habeas court set forth the following facts in its discussion of this claim. "Jason Greene gave two statements to Waterbury Police Detective Kennelly on December 29, 2001, within hours of the murder. The statements are inconsistent in a number of respects. The most glaring inconsistency concern[ed] his first statement reciting he saw the petitioner jump out of the Lexus and 'walk up to [the victim] point a gun at him and shoot him twice.' In the second statement he changes his recollection of the shooting as follows: '[W]e all walked back to the Lexus . . . Greg was driving . . . [the victim] was standing in the middle of the walkway and yelled something at us . . . Greg got out along with Michael and [the petitioner] . . . I watched Greg walked up the front stairs and down the walkway . . . [the petitioner] was walking down the driveway to the corner of the building . . . I got out of the rear seat and got in the driver's seat . . . Then I heard two shots behind me . . . looked back to see what was happening and [the petitioner] was getting into the front passenger seat . . . I looked down and saw a gun in his hand . . . I asked [the petitioner] what was going on and he said “go, go, I shot that dude . . . .” In his trial testimony, he denied ever telling the police that he saw the petitioner shoot [the victim]. Detective Kennelly testified, credibly, to the circumstance surrounding the taking of both statements.

“With respect to Michael Greene, he provided a statement on December 29, 2001, to Waterbury Police Sgt. Jannetty, also within hours of the murder, in which he said that at first he did not want to say anything about [the petitioner] shooting [the victim] ‘because [the petitioner’s] my cousin, and I didn’t want to see him go to jail.’ In the statement, Michael Greene gives the following account of what occurred: ‘[The victim] and Gregory kept arguing in the lobby . . . [the petitioner] also had some words with . . . [the victim] . . . he seemed to be sticking up for Gregory . . . [the victim] was saying he wanted to handle it all another day . . . [the petitioner] was saying “[Expletive] that, we ain’t letten’ this [expletive] ride” . . . We got in the Lexus . . . I looked in the backseat and saw the petitioner holding a gun . . . the gun he always carries . . . When we got up to the front of the diner by the ramp . . . [the victim] was saying something . . . Gregory jumped out of the driver’s side to confront [the victim] . . . Me and [the petitioner] ran out of the Lexus and I grabbed Gregory from behind . . . [the petitioner] walked up to [the victim] from behind, said “[Expletive],” and held up the gun and shot him twice . . . [the victim] fell onto the ramp, and landed backwards on the side of the diner.’ In his trial testimony, Michael Greene basically repudiates critical portions of his December 29, 2001 statement denying that he actually saw the petitioner shoot [the victim], and that he observed the petitioner with a gun. [Jannetty] testified, credibly, to the circumstance[s] surrounding the taking of both statements.”

Brewer v. Commissioner of Correction

At the habeas trial, Cizik testified that he did not object to the substantive admission of the Greenes' statements because those statements undermined their credibility and "that could only be a good thing for the jury to see."

Bansley agreed with Cizik's strategic decision not to object to the admission of the statements of the Greenes, testifying that "the more inconsistent statements that were presented in court, were more effective to the defense in showing that these individuals were untruthful and shouldn't be believed. I thought that was more important than objecting to it. I don't . . . personally . . . believe in objecting just because you can and just because you can win an objection. You've got to look beyond that and see whether the evidence actually hurts, and in this case I thought it was helpful because it impeached the credibility of the witnesses." Bansley further explained: "[W]hen I looked at the totality of the evidence and reviewed the transcripts, I thought it was more favorable that this evidence went in than not . . . [because] both of these individuals were present at the scene. Easily, you could have pointed fingers at them, so they had a reason to lie. On top of that, they're talking about the police making threats. Frankly, I thought the combination of all that brought a fair amount of reasonable doubt."<sup>1</sup>

The habeas court held: "Attorney Cizik, as an experienced criminal trial lawyer, was well aware of the evidentiary law on the substantive use of inconsistent statements under State v. Whelan, [200 Conn. 743, 753, 513 A.2d 86, cert. denied, 479 U.S. 994, 107 S. Ct. 597, 93 L. Ed. 2d 598 (1986)]. He was also well aware that Whelan was not a 'blanket rule' . . . and of the trial court's limited 'gate-keeping' function upon objection. [Cizik] testified, credibly, that he did not adhere to the concept of objecting for the sake of objecting, particularly where it appeared futile based on his assessment, and most especially when he believed the admission of the statements would benefit the defense by unveiling initial falsehoods and highlighting a [witness'] proclivity to fabricate. In the court's view, such was a prudential tactical determination on the part of counsel, and no evidence has been presented that, under these circumstances, the decision not to object rendered the representation, under the Strickland standard, 'outside the range of competence displayed by lawyers with ordinary training and skill in the criminal law,' nor has the petitioner shown the required prejudice." (Footnote omitted.)

<sup>1</sup> Bansley also testified that the admission of the statements was irrelevant to the petitioner's defense at trial, which was that he was not even present when the victim was killed.

On appeal, the petitioner claims that the habeas court erred in rejecting his claim that Bansley rendered ineffective assistance by failing to raise, in his first habeas action, the claim that Cizik's representation of him was deficient in failing to object to the statements at issue because that failure allowed "harmful evidence against [the petitioner to reach] the jury." We disagree.

As noted herein, our scrutiny of counsel's performance is highly deferential, and we must indulge a strong presumption that counsel's performance falls within a wide range of reasonable representation. See Adkins v. Commissioner of Correction, supra, 185 Conn. App. 151.

Both Cizik and Bansley testified that it is not necessary to object to the admission of evidence simply for the sake of objecting, and that the evidence at issue must be viewed within the context of the entire case. Cizik testified at the habeas trial that he did not object to the admission of the statements at issue because he considered the admission of those statements beneficial to the petitioner. Bansley agreed with Cizik's assessment that the inconsistency of those statements was beneficial to the petitioner in that they highlighted the lack of credibility of the two witnesses. Even if there was a likelihood that the trial court would have sustained an objection to the admission of the statements, we agree with the habeas court that Cizik's decision not to object to their admission was a reasonable strategic decision based on his assessment that the statements were beneficial to the petitioner. We thus conclude that the habeas court properly determined that Bansley was not ineffective in failing to claim in the petitioner's first habeas corpus action that Cizik was ineffective in failing to object to the admission of the statements of Jason Greene and Michael Greene.

The judgment is affirmed.

In this opinion the other judges concurred.

DiPentima, C. J., and Keller and Elgo, Js.

Syllabus

The defendant, whose marriage to the plaintiff previously had been dissolved, appealed to this court from the judgment of the trial court denying the plaintiff's postjudgment motion for contempt. The judgment of dissolution incorporated the parties' separation agreement, which required the defendant to pay the plaintiff a minimum of $3000 per month in unallocated alimony, with an additional amount owed based on the annual earnings of the defendant. The separation agreement further provided, inter alia, that a loan that the defendant had received from his employer, R Co., was to be forgiven by R Co., and the income imputed to the defendant and reflected on his W-2 form. Subsequently, the plaintiff filed a motion for contempt, which the court denied, but the court nonetheless agreed with the plaintiff that, for the purpose of calculating additional alimony, the defendant's earned income in 2016 was $168,765.91, the figure reflected on his W-2 form. The court found that, in 2016, the defendant had failed to pay additional alimony as required by the separation agreement and ordered that he pay the plaintiff $3753.18. On appeal, the defendant claimed that the trial court improperly concluded that his earned income was the amount reflected on his W-2 form. Specifically, he claimed, inter alia, that the court, in calculating his earned income, should have excluded his noncash earnings, including amounts allocated in connection with his forgiven debt obligations to R Co., as such income never was actually available to him. The plaintiff cross appealed and claimed that the trial court incorrectly calculated the defendant's additional alimony payments.

---

Held:

1. The trial court properly found that the defendant's earned income in 2016 was the amount reflected on his W-2 form and, thus, that he owed additional alimony pursuant to the parties' separation agreement: it was evident that the parties intended earned income to be the amount shown on the defendant's W-2 form, as the separation agreement provided that, upon written request from the plaintiff, the defendant was required to produce his paychecks and W-2 and/or 1099 forms reflecting earned income, and that reading was consistent with the definition of earned income as set forth in the applicable federal statute (26 U.S.C. § 32 [c] [2] [A] [i] and [ii]), which defines earned income as the gross earnings received as compensation from employment and the net earnings received from self-employment; moreover, the defendant could not prevail on his claim that, as a financial advisor who did not receive a salary or hourly wage from his employer but was compensated purely on a commission basis, he was for all practical purposes self-employed and, thus, his earned income should be his net earnings, i.e., his gross compensation minus his business related expenses, and not the figure shown on his W-2 form, as net earnings from self-employment for the purposes of 26 U.S.C. § 32 relate specifically to compensation from an individual's own business or distributions from a partnership of which the individual is a member, the defendant conceded that he was employed by R Co. and that he received his commission as compensation for services rendered as an employee, and the defendant received a W-2 form at the end of the year, which, pursuant to the applicable federal regulation (26 C.F.R. § 31.6051-1 [a]), is required when an employer deducts and withholds taxes from an employee; furthermore, the defendant's claim that the inclusion of his noncash earnings in his earned income was improper was unavailing, as the separation agreement clearly provided that the income imputed to the defendant in connection with his forgiven debt obligations to R Co. was to be included in his earned income for the purposes of calculating his additional alimony obligations, and any claim that that was not the intent of the parties in drafting their separation agreement was contradicted expressly by the unambiguous language provided therein.

2. The trial court incorrectly calculated the defendant's additional alimony payments because it failed to include 30 percent of his earned income in excess of $102,000 but less than $150,000; the parties' separation agreement was unambiguous and required the defendant, who earned $168,765.91 in 2016, to pay 30 percent of his earned income in excess of $102,000 but less than $150,000, and 20 percent of his earned income in excess of $150,000 but less than $200,000, and the trial court, which ordered the defendant to pay an additional $3753.18 in alimony representing 20 percent of the income that the defendant earned in excess of $150,000, improperly failed to include 30 percent of the income that the defendant earned in excess of $102,000 but less than $150,000, which is $14,400.

defendant claims that the trial court improperly found that his “earned income,” for the purpose of calculating the amount of additional alimony that he owed the plaintiff in 2016, was the amount shown on his W-2 form. The plaintiff contends in her cross appeal that, although the court correctly determined that the defendant’s earned income was the figure provided on his W-2 form, it failed to calculate the additional alimony owed in 2016 in accordance with the parties’ separation agreement (agreement). We affirm the judgment as to the defendant’s appeal and, as to the plaintiff’s cross appeal, we reverse the judgment only with respect to the court’s calculation of the alimony amount owed by the defendant in 2016.

The following undisputed facts and procedural history are relevant for the purposes of this appeal and cross appeal. The parties were married on November 27, 1996, and their marriage was dissolved on February 9, 2012. The judgment of dissolution incorporated the parties’ agreement, which provides, in relevant part, that the defendant is to pay the plaintiff unallocated alimony until September 11, 2019, or until the plaintiff’s death, remarriage, or cohabitation for more than three months, whichever event shall occur first. Pursuant to article 3.2 of the agreement, the defendant is required to pay the plaintiff a minimum of $3000 per month, with an additional amount owed based on the annual earnings of the defendant. Specifically, the agreement provides that the defendant is to pay additional alimony as follows: 30 percent of his earned income in excess of $102,000 and less than $150,000; 20 percent of his earned income in excess of $150,000 and less than $200,000; and 0 percent of his earned income in excess of $200,000. The agreement also states in article 3.4 that in any year in which the defendant does not pay the maximum annual alimony amount, he shall provide the plaintiff, upon written request, with copies of his quarterly paychecks and his year-end W-2 or 1099 forms reflecting “earned income.”

The agreement also addressed a $160,000 loan that the defendant had received from his employer, Royal Bank of Canada (Royal Bank), of which approximately $46,000 was unspent and in the defendant’s possession. According to article 6.2 of the agreement, the entirety of the loan was to be forgiven by Royal Bank, and the income imputed to the defendant, over a series of years, and reflected on his W-2. Moreover, the agreement specified that this imputed income “shall be included in the computation of unallocated alimony . . . .”

On March 7, 2017, the plaintiff filed a postjudgment motion for contempt, which alleged that the defendant had “refused to voluntarily pay alimony based on [his] 2016 earnings and as stipulated in the divorce decree.” On June 13, 2017, the court held an evidentiary hearing on the plaintiff’s motion and received testimony from both parties. During the hearing, the plaintiff argued that, based on the defendant’s 2016 W-2 form, his earned income was $168,765.91, which, thus, required him to pay additional alimony as outlined in the parties’ agreement. In response, the defendant stipulated that although he did owe the plaintiff additional alimony, he calculated his earned income to be approximately $104,744. In reaching this figure, the defendant excluded his noncash earnings, including income that had been imputed to him in connection with his forgiven debt obligations to Royal Bank, and deducted from his cash earnings certain business and medical related expenses.

In an order dated June 18, 2017, the court denied the motion for contempt but nonetheless agreed with the plaintiff that, for the purpose of calculating additional alimony, the defendant’s earned income was the figure reflected on his W-2 form, i.e., $168,765.91. The court,

therefore, found that the defendant had failed to pay additional alimony as required by the parties' agreement and ordered that he pay the plaintiff $3753.18 no later than August 25, 2017.<sup>1</sup> From this decision, both parties now appeal. Additional facts will be set forth as needed.

I

In his appeal, the defendant claims that the court improperly concluded that his earned income was the amount reflected on his W-2 form. Specifically, the defendant argues that the court, in calculating his earned income, should have (1) deducted from his cash earnings the business expenses provided on his 2016 tax return, as these costs were unreimbursed and necessary to the defendant's compensation as a commissioned salesman, and (2) excluded his noncash earnings, including amounts allocated in connection with his forgiven debt obligations to Royal Bank, as such income never was actually available to him. We do not agree.

We begin our analysis of the defendant's claim by setting forth our standard of review. "It is well established that a separation agreement that has been incorporated into a dissolution decree and its resulting judgment must be regarded as a contract and construed in accordance with the general principles governing contracts." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) McTiernan v. McTiernan, 164 Conn. App. 805, 821, 138 A.3d 935 (2016). "A contract must be construed to effectuate the intent of the parties, which is determined from the language used interpreted in the light of the situation of the parties and the circumstances connected with the transaction. . . . If a contract is unambiguous within its four corners, the determination of what the parties intended by their contractual commitments is a question of law. . . . When the language of a contract is ambiguous, [however] the determination of the parties' intent is a question of fact, and the trial court's interpretation is subject to reversal on appeal only if it is clearly erroneous. . . . In interpreting contract items, we have repeatedly stated that the intent of the parties is to be ascertained by a fair and reasonable construction of the written words and that the language used must be accorded its common, natural, and ordinary meaning and usage where it can be sensibly applied to the subject matter of the contract." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Hirschfeld v. Machinist, 181 Conn. App. 309, 322–23, 186 A.3d 771, cert. denied, 329 Conn. 913, 186 A.3d 1170 (2018). "The court will not torture words to impart ambiguity where ordinary meaning leaves no room for ambiguity. . . . Moreover, the mere fact that the parties advance different interpretations of the language in question does not necessitate a conclusion that the language is ambiguous." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Parisi v. Parisi, 315 Conn. 370, 383, 107 A.3d 920 (2015).

<sup>1</sup> On July 5, 2017, the plaintiff filed a motion for clarification, requesting that the court correct its order to comply with the provisions of the agreement. Specifically, the plaintiff argued that the court had failed to include in its calculation 30 percent of the defendant's earned income in excess of $102,000 but less than $150,000. The plaintiff's motion was denied without explanation on August 1, 2017.

Applying the foregoing principles to the present matter, we conclude that the term "earned income" as used in the parties' agreement is unambiguous. By the provisions of the agreement itself, it is evident that the parties intended "earned income" to be the amount shown on the defendant's W-2 form. As stated previously in this opinion, article 3.4 of the agreement provides that, upon written request from the plaintiff, the defendant is required to produce his paychecks and "W-2 and/or 1099's reflecting earned income." (Emphasis added.) The inclusion of this provision evinces a clear intent by the parties that the income provided on the defendant's W-2 is his "earned income" for the purpose of ascertaining his additional alimony obligations. Moreover, this reading is consistent with the definition of “earned income” as set forth in 26 U.S.C. § 32 (c) (2) (A), which states: “The term ‘earned income’ means . . . (i) wages, salaries, tips, and other employee compensation, but only if such amounts are includible in gross income for the taxable year, plus (ii) the amount of the taxpayer’s net earnings from self-employment for the taxable year (within the meaning of section 1402 [a]), but such net earnings shall be determined with regard to the deduction allowed to the taxpayer by section 164 (f).” Pursuant to this definition, earned income is the gross earnings received as compensation from employment and the net earnings received from self-employment.<sup>2</sup>

To this second point, however, the defendant contends that, if we conclude the parties intended “earned income” to have the same definition as provided in 26 U.S.C. § 32, he is for all practical purposes “self-employed,” and, thus, his earned income should be his net earnings, i.e., his gross compensation minus his business related expenses, and not the figure shown on his W-2. At oral argument before the trial court and this court, the defendant asserted that, as a financial advisor, he does not receive a salary or hourly wage from his employer but is compensated purely on a commission basis. As such, the defendant argued that it is necessary for him to incur significant expenses throughout the year in an effort to maintain his skill and knowledge of the financial industry, as well as to market himself to prospective clients. In support of his position, the defendant has cited in his brief several Superior Court decisions in which business expense deductions were permitted in the calculation of alimony and child support obligations. See Nedder v. Nedder, Superior Court, judicial district of Middlesex, Docket No. FA-10-4019331-S (May 2, 2013) (court considered business expenses of husband, real estate agent, in determining appropriate alimony award); Means v. Means, Superior Court, judicial district of New London at Norwich, Docket No. CV-94-315846-S (May 22, 1996) (17 Conn. L. Rptr. 26, 27) (court deviated from child support guidelines to account for husband's business expenses despite fact that he was not self-employed). We find these cases to be inapposite and the defendant's overall argument unpersuasive.

Net earnings from self-employment for the purposes of 26 U.S.C. § 32 relate specifically to compensation from an individual's own business or distributions from a partnership of which the individual is a member. See 26 U.S.C. § 1402 (a) (2012). The defendant concedes that he is employed by Royal Bank and that he receives his commission as compensation for services rendered as an employee. Moreover, he receives a W-2 form at the end of the year, which pursuant to federal regulations is required when an employer deducts and withholds taxes from an employee. See 26 C.F.R. § 31.6051-1 (a) (2018). Although he may be permitted for the purposes of calculating his income tax liability for the calendar year to deduct the expenses that he incurs in connection with his employment, these deductions are nonetheless inconsequential in calculating his earned income, as defined by 26 U.S.C. § 32. Further to this point, the cases cited by the defendant are distinguishable factually insofar as they involved the calculation of child support and alimony payments in circumstances where no separation agreement existed. Accordingly, we discern no merit in the defendant's position that he is self-employed for the purposes of determining his earned income under the agreement.

We now turn to the defendant's second claim that the inclusion of his noncash earnings in his earned income was improper. The defendant submits that it was not the intent of the parties to include imputed income in the calculation of additional alimony payments because such compensation is "phantom" and not actually available to him. Further, he contends that the loan he received from his employer was spent on marital expenses prior to the parties' divorce and, therefore, the financial burden of this debt should be shared equally. Following a careful review of the record, we conclude that article 6.2 of the agreement is dispositive of this issue.<sup>3</sup> Specifically, that provision clearly states that the income imputed to the defendant in connection with his forgiven debt obligations to Royal Bank is to be included in his earned income for the purposes of calculating his additional alimony obligations. Any claim that this was not the intent of the parties in drafting their agreement is contradicted expressly by the unambiguous language provided therein.

We conclude that, in light of the unambiguous language in the agreement, the trial court properly found that the defendant's earned income was $168,765.91 in

<sup>3</sup> The defendant also claims that the inclusion of the portion of his noncash earnings related to his domestic partner's medical benefits, totaling $7968, which he receives from his employer, is improper. We do not agree; such benefits fall within the definition of gross income as it is defined by 26 U.S.C. § 61 (a) and are not excludable under 26 U.S.C. § 106; therefore, the court properly included this amount in the calculation of the defendant's "earned income."

2016, and, thus, he owed additional alimony pursuant to the parties' agreement.

II

In her cross appeal, the plaintiff claims that the trial court incorrectly calculated the defendant's additional alimony payments because it failed to include 30 percent of his earned income in excess of $102,000 but less than $150,000. We agree with the plaintiff and, accordingly, reverse the judgment of the trial court with respect to this finding and direct judgment consistent with this opinion.

In addressing this claim, we iterate our standard of review as to a trial court's interpretation of contractual terms. "If a contract is unambiguous within its four corners, the determination of what the parties intended by their contractual commitments is a question of law. . . . When the language of a contract is ambiguous, [however] the determination of the parties' intent is a question of fact, and the trial court's interpretation is subject to reversal on appeal only if it is clearly erroneous." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Hirschfeld v. Machinist, supra, 181 Conn. App. 322–23.

Applying this standard to the plaintiff's claim, we conclude that article 3.2 of the agreement, which provides the formula for calculating the defendant's additional alimony obligations, is unambiguous and requires the defendant to pay a percentage of all income earned in excess of $102,000. As indicated previously in this opinion, the agreement states that the defendant is to pay "30 [percent] of earned income in excess of $102,000 and less than [$150,000]"; "20 [percent] of earned income in excess of $150,000 and less than $200,000"; and "0 [percent] of earned income in excess of $200,000." In finding that the defendant earned $168,765.91, the court ordered the defendant to pay an additional $3753.18 in alimony, which represents 20

587

Seale v. GeoQuest, Inc.

percent of the income that the defendant earned in excess of $150,000. The court failed to include, however, 30 percent of the income that the defendant earned in excess of $102,000 but less than $150,000, which is $14,400. We conclude, therefore, that because article 3.2 clearly sets forth a stepdown structure in which the defendant is required to pay the applicable percentage of any earned income he had in excess of $102,000, he was required to pay $14,400 in addition to the 20 percent of the income he had earned in excess of $150,000, which the court correctly calculated to be $3753.18.<sup>4</sup>

The judgment is reversed in part only as to the amount of additional alimony owed in 2016 and the case is remanded with direction to order the defendant to pay a total of $18,153.18 in additional alimony to the plaintiff; the judgment is affirmed in all other respects.

In this opinion the other judges concurred.

Seale v. GeoQuest, Inc.

In March, 2014, the plaintiff entered into a contract to purchase 11 Minute Man Hill in Westport from a third-party seller. Prior to the closing, the third-party seller had an underground storage tank removed from the property. The third-party seller learned that this storage tank had leaked and contaminated the soil on the property. The third-party seller engaged an excavation company to remove the tank and this company, in turn, hired the defendant to remediate the soil contamination.

On August 12, 2014, the defendant, acting through its employee Jay Soltis, a licensed environmental professional and the defendant's vice president of environmental services, arrived on the property to supervise the remediation. As part of this process, the defendant removed approximately forty-one tons of soil. On August 13, 2014, Soltis wrote a report and e-mailed it to the excavation company that day. The report provided, in relevant part, as follows: "Excavation to the north was limited due to structural concerns for the site home (per [Connecticut Department of Energy and Environmental Protection (CT DEEP)] [G]uidance, excavation is not required when the structural stability of a building may be compromised). With the exception of the northern sidewall, excavation continued until no visible or olfactory indications of contamination remained in the soils. . . . Based on the results of the confirmation sampling program, the fuel oil release has been effectively remediated in site soil, and no further environmental investigation or remediation is warranted at this time." (Emphasis added.) Soltis attached the test results from the laboratory, which showed that the soil contamination was below the relevant detection level of 500 milligrams per kilogram. This report subsequently was provided to the plaintiff and his attorney.

Seale v. GeoQuest, Inc.

In 2015, the plaintiff decided to sell the property after having demolished the home that had existed thereon. The purchaser, SIR Development, LLC, engaged a remediation contractor, EnviroShield, Inc., to determine whether any fuel contamination existed on the property. EnviroShield, Inc., estimated that between 300 and 400 tons of contaminated soil needed to be removed, and indicated that the source of this contamination was “beneath the former residence location.”

The plaintiff then hired Mark A. Gottlieb, a licensed environmental professional, to further investigate the soil contamination at the property. Gottlieb supervised the remediation and issued a December 1, 2015 report indicating that approximately 130 tons of soil had been removed. The plaintiff had the property remediated at a cost of approximately $45,000.

In April, 2016, the plaintiff commenced this action. The plaintiff’s complaint set forth two counts sounding in negligence and negligent misrepresentation. The court found that the plaintiff had failed to meet his burden of proof as to these causes of action. “The three licensed environmental professionals [who had testified at the trial, Gottlieb, Soltis, and Marc I. Casslar, the president of the defendant] unanimously agreed that the [defendant] did not violate any state or municipal rule or regulation. The contaminated soil left on site was in accordance with the CT DEEP Guidance. The court finds that the plaintiff failed to prove any breach of reasonable care on the part of the [defendant].” Accordingly, the court rendered judgment in favor of the defendant. This appeal followed.<sup>2</sup> Additional facts will be set forth as needed.

brief, the plaintiff argues that the defendant's report indicated that the soil at the property had been " 'effectively remediated' " and that " 'no further environmental investigation or remediation is warranted at this time.' " He specifically contends that the defendant deviated from the standard of care for a licensed environmental professional by failing (1) to excavate to a sufficient depth to detect and remove accessible contaminated soil, (2) to take samples from the bottom of the excavation, (3) to include photographs and a site sketch in its report, (4) to specifically state in its report that contaminated soil remained on the property, and (5) to specifically state that further environmental investigation was warranted. The defendant counters that the court properly relied on the evidence to support its conclusion that the defendant had not breached its duty to the plaintiff. We agree with the defendant.<sup>3</sup>

As noted, the plaintiff's complaint set forth two causes of action: negligence<sup>4</sup> and negligent misrepresentation.<sup>5</sup> The court concluded that the defendant had not violated any state or municipal regulations and that the contaminated soil that remained on the property was in accordance with the CT DEEP Guidance. Therefore, the court reasoned that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the defendant had breached a duty owed to the plaintiff as a result of its conclusion that the property effectively had been remediated and that no further investigation or remediation was warranted at that time. As a corollary, the court determined that the defendant had not made a misrepresentation of fact to the plaintiff that it knew, or should have known, was false.

<sup>3</sup> As a result, we decline to consider the defendant's alternative grounds for affirming the judgment of the trial court, namely, that it did not owe a duty to the plaintiff and that it was not the cause in fact of the plaintiff's alleged damages.

The plaintiff argues that the court improperly found that the defendant had not breached its duty of care. The determination of a breach of duty is reserved for the trier of fact. Neuhaus v. DeCholnoky, 280 Conn. 190, 217, 905 A.2d 1135 (2006); see also Mirjavadi v. Vakilzadeh, 310 Conn. 176, 191, 74 A.3d 1278 (2013); Behlman v. Universal Travel Agency, Inc., 4 Conn. Moreover, we repeatedly have held that [i]n a [proceeding] tried before a court, the trial judge is the sole arbiter of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given specific testimony. . . . App. 493, 513, 167 A.3d 1112, cert. denied, 327 Conn. 973, 174 A.3d 192 (2017).

In the present case, Gottlieb testified during cross-examination that Soltis' report indicated to him, as a licensed environmental professional, that the defendant had been aware of contaminated soil under the home. He further stated that the plaintiff incorrectly interpreted Soltis' report as stating that all the contaminated soil had been removed.<sup>6</sup> Gottlieb acknowledged that it would have been impossible for the defendant to ensure that the property was completely free of contaminated soil due to the presence of the home. Gottlieb could not identify any state or municipal law that the defendant had violated with respect to its work on the property. Finally, he conceded that even if the defendant had performed the remediation on the property in the exact manner that Gottlieb described, contaminated soil nevertheless would have been present under the foundation of the then-existing home.

Soltis testified that the defendant had been hired to assist in the remediation of the property in August, 2014. At that time, he was unaware of any plan to demolish the home then existing on the property, and Soltis testified that if the home had not been demolished, no additional remediation would have been necessary. He further opined that his report could not be read as asserting that no contaminated soil remained on the property. He stated that leaving the contaminated soil in the northern sidewall was permissible under the CT DEEP Guidance and that, pursuant to that document,

"Q. If [the plaintiff] testified that he read the report as stating that no soil contamination was left behind, would you agree—would you disagree with [the plaintiff's] reading of the report?"

"A. Yeah. [He] is not correct here. There was detectable contamination in the north wall sample."

the defendant had completed an effective remediation. Finally, he noted that the defendant's work on the property followed industry standards.

Casslar testified that the Soltis report complied with industry customs and that he found it to be accurate and intelligible. He further noted his disagreement with Gottlieb's report and testimony regarding the remediation of the property supervised by Soltis. Casslar also described several flaws contained in Gottlieb's report.

In the present case, the trial court acted as the sole arbiter of the credibility of the licensed environmental professionals and determined the proper weight to be accorded their specific testimony. Arroyo v. University of Connecticut Health Center, supra, 175 Conn. App. 513. Furthermore, the court bore the responsibility of resolving the conflicting testimony as to whether the defendant, through the action of Soltis, had breached the duty of care regarding the remediation of the property. Id. We cannot say that the court's finding was clearly erroneous. Evidence existed in the record to support the finding that the defendant had not breached its duty of care, and after reviewing the record, this court is not left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed.

The court concluded that the defendant had not breached its duty of care. Furthermore, in the absence of any such breach, the defendant did not make a misrepresentation of fact as to the conditions of the soil at the property. As a result, we conclude that the court properly rendered judgment in favor of the defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

The plaintiff sought to recover damages from the defendant insurance company for, inter alia, breach of contract in connection with lost rental income and damage to certain of its real property that was sustained during a hurricane. The defendant filed a motion to dismiss, asserting that the plaintiff lacked standing to bring its claim for lost rental income because it had sold the property to a third party and assigned the rights to the insurance proceeds to that third party pursuant to the terms of the real estate purchase agreement. The plaintiff claimed that it had standing and was entitled to the insurance proceeds because the damage occurred before it entered into the real estate purchase agreement with the third party and because it had retained an interest in the damaged rental units as a result of its decision to exercise a leaseback provision in that agreement. The trial court granted the defendant's motion to dismiss, concluding, inter alia, that the plaintiff lacked standing because, by virtue of the assignment, it had no legal interest in the insurance proceeds. The trial court thereafter rendered judgment for the defendant, from which the plaintiff appealed to this court. Held that the trial court properly granted the defendant's motion to dismiss and rendered judgment dismissing the plaintiff's complaint; because the trial court's memorandum of decision thoroughly addressed the arguments raised in this appeal, this court adopted the trial court's well reasoned decision as a proper statement of the facts and the applicable law on the issues.

Opinion

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff, Liberty Transportation, Inc., appeals from the judgment of the trial court granting the motion to dismiss filed by the defendant, Massachusetts Bay Insurance Company. The dispositive issue in the appeal is whether the court properly concluded that the plaintiff lacked standing to commence this action. We affirm the judgment of the trial court.

The plaintiff set forth the following allegations in its complaint. In August, 2011, the plaintiff owned property located at 11 High Street in Suffield, which the defendant insured for, inter alia, property damage, loss of income and fair rental value. On or about August 28, 2011, the property suffered wind and water damage during a hurricane. As a result, the plaintiff claimed to have sustained damages for lost income and lost fair rental value, and made an insurance claim to the defendant. The defendant declined to pay the plaintiff's claim. In August, 2013, the plaintiff commenced this action against the defendant. Its complaint set forth claims for breach of contract and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. It sought money damages, interest, attorney's fees, costs, and any other relief deemed appropriate by the court. The defendant filed an answer and raised several special defenses on January 8, 2016.

On September 6, 2017, the defendant filed a motion to dismiss pursuant to Practice Book § 10-30. Specifically, the defendant argued that the plaintiff lacked standing to bring its claim for lost rental income for two commercial units at the property because the plaintiff had sold the property to a third party on January

[The] [p]laintiff, therefore, lacks standing to maintain this action on its own behalf.”

On October 6, 2017, the plaintiff filed a memorandum of law in opposition to the defendant’s motion to dismiss. It argued that the loss of rental income occurred <sup>1</sup>The defendant attached a copy of the real estate purchase agreement for 11 High Street in Suffield. Generally, “[w]hen a . . . court decides a . . . question raised by a pretrial motion to dismiss, it must consider the allegations of the complaint in their most favorable light. . . . In this regard, a court must take the facts to be those alleged in the complaint, including those facts necessarily implied from the allegations, construing them in a manner most favorable to the pleader. . . . The motion to dismiss . . . admits all facts which are well pleaded, invokes the existing record and must be decided upon that alone. . . .

“[I]f the complaint is supplemented by undisputed facts established by affidavits submitted in support of the motion to dismiss . . . other types of undisputed evidence . . . and/or public records of which judicial notice may be taken . . . the trial court, in determining a jurisdictional issue, may consider these supplementary undisputed facts and need not conclusively presume the validity of the allegations of the complaint. . . . Rather, those allegations are tempered by the light shed on them by the [supplementary undisputed facts]. . . . If affidavits and/or other evidence submitted in support of a defendant’s motion to dismiss conclusively establish that jurisdiction is lacking, and the plaintiff fails to undermine this conclusion with counteraffidavits . . . or other evidence, the trial court may dismiss the action without further proceedings.” (Citation omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) *Caron v. <sup>2</sup> Paragraph 12 of the real estate purchase agreement provides: “The [plaintiff] assumes all risk of loss or damage to the [property] until closing and the PURCHASER assumes same upon closing. If any damage to the [property] shall not be restored prior to closing PURCHASER shall be required to close title to the [property] and shall receive in an amount not to exceed the purchase price all insurance monies recovered and recoverable on account of such damage. In the event of damage or loss [the plaintiff] shall before the formation of the real estate purchase agreement. The plaintiff further claimed it was “classically aggrieved in that it has a specific interest in the claimed insurance proceeds . . . [and] suffered a loss due to the breach of contract by the [defendant] and has standing to bring this action.” It also contended that it had retained an interest in the damaged units as a result of its decision to exercise a leaseback provision as set forth in the real estate purchase agreement.<sup>3</sup>

On March 27, 2018, the court, Shapiro, J., issued a memorandum of decision granting the defendant’s motion to dismiss. It first addressed the defendant’s argument that the plaintiff had assigned the rights to the insurance proceeds to the third party pursuant to the terms of the real estate purchase agreement. It specifically explained: “An assignment is a transfer of property or some other right from one person (the assignor) to another (the assignee), which confers a complete and present right in the subject matter to the assignee. . . . Succession by an assignee to exclusive ownership of all or part of the assignor’s rights respecting the subject matter of the assignment, and a corresponding extinguishment of those rights in the assignor, is precisely the effect of a valid assignment.” (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) The court concluded that a valid assignment had occurred.

The court was not persuaded by the plaintiff’s arguments that (1) it was entitled to the insurance proceeds immediately notify PURCHASER thereof and furnish to PURCHASER a written statement of the amount of insurance, if any, payable on account thereof.”

<sup>3</sup> Paragraph 17 of the real estate purchase agreement provides in relevant part: “Notwithstanding the transfer of title, if a closing is had the [plaintiff] shall be entitled at its election to lease back the apartment located in the front of the building above the barber shop as presently configured and the small first floor one room office identified as Suite 1 for a term of one year from closing . . . . At PURCHASERS election [the plaintiff] may lease either or both of said units for a further one year terms at an increased rental . . . .”

because the damage had occurred before it entered into the real estate purchase agreement with the third party and (2) the execution of the leaseback provision in the real estate purchase agreement established its interest in the property such that it had standing. The court also rejected the plaintiff's claim that a separate agreement with the defendant entitled the plaintiff to any insurance moneys. Indeed, the plaintiff had failed to provide the court with a copy of this alleged separate agreement. The court granted the defendant's motion, concluding that "the plaintiff lacks standing in the present case because, by virtue of the assignment, it has no legal interest in alleged insurance proceeds that are due and payable on account of damage to the [property]." This appeal followed.

We carefully have examined the record and the briefs and arguments of the parties, and conclude that the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed. Because the trial court's memorandum of decision thoroughly addresses the arguments raised in this appeal, we adopt that court's well reasoned decision as a proper statement of the facts and the applicable law on the issues. *Liberty Transportation, Inc. v. BACKGROUND

The defendant, Massachusetts Bay Insurance Co., contends that the plaintiff, Liberty Transportation, Inc., lacks standing to pursue this matter, since it assigned its rights to recover any insurance proceeds to a third party. The plaintiff alleges that it is entitled to payments under an insurance policy issued by the defendant concerning a commercial building. It contends that the loss which is the subject of the action predated the purchase agreement relied on by the defendant, and, in the agreement, the plaintiff retained the right to continue to use or rent the two units in the building which are the subject of the claim. Additional references to the background are set forth below.

DISCUSSION

A

“Standing is the legal right to set judicial machinery in motion. One cannot rightfully invoke the jurisdiction of the court unless he [or she] has, in an individual or representative capacity, some real interest in the cause of action, or a legal or equitable right, title or interest in the subject matter of the controversy. . . . When standing is put in issue, the question is whether the person whose standing is challenged is a proper party to request an adjudication of the issue . . . . Standing requires no more than a colorable claim of injury; a [party] ordinarily establishes . . . standing by allegations of injury. Similarly, standing exists to attempt to vindicate arguably protected interests.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Ferri v. Powell-Ferri, 326 Conn. 438, 447–48, 165 A.3d 1137 (2017).

“[B]ecause the issue of standing implicates subject matter jurisdiction, it may be a proper basis for granting a motion to dismiss.” Electrical Contractors, Inc. v. Dept. of Education, 303 Conn. 402, 413, 35 A.3d 188 (2012). “[W]hether a party has standing, based upon a given set of facts, is a question of law for the court . . . and in this respect the labels placed on the allegations by the parties [are] not controlling.” (Citation omitted.) Ganim v. Smith & Wesson Corp., 258 Conn. 313, 348, 780 A.2d 98 (2001). “It is well established that, in determining whether a court has subject matter jurisdiction, every presumption favoring jurisdiction should be indulged.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Financial Consulting, LLC v. Commissioner of Ins., 315 Conn. 196, 226, 105 A.3d 210 (2014).

The defendant contends that the plaintiff made an assignment to Capital Three Development, LLC (Capital), of the plaintiff’s right to the insurance proceeds pursuant to the real estate purchase agreement (Agreement) between the plaintiff and Capital.

Gordon*, 173 Conn. Lawrence Brunoli, Inc.*, 265 Conn. 210, 227, 828 A.2d 64 (2003). App. 445, 453, 36 A.3d 243, cert. denied, 304 Conn. 912, 40 A.3d 319 (2012). “Succession by an assignee to exclusive ownership of all or part of the assignor’s rights respecting the subject matter of the assignment, and a corresponding extinguishment of those rights in the assignor, is precisely the effect of a valid assignment.” Bouchard v. People’s Bank, 219 Conn. 465, 473, 594 A.2d 1 (1991).

An assignment is valid if two elements are satisfied. See American First Federal, Inc. v. Gordon, supra, 173 Conn. App. 583–84. The first element is that the assignor possessed “an intent to assign—that is, to [confer] a complete and present right in the subject matter to the assignee.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 583. “The intent to assign may appear from the writing itself, or may be derived from another source, such as the acts of the assignor or the surrounding circumstances.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 583–84. “No words of art are required to constitute an assignment; any words that fairly indicate an intention to make the assignee owner of a claim are sufficient . . . .” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Sunset Gold Realty, LLC v. Premier Building & Development, Inc., supra, 133 Conn. App. 452–53. “In determining the intent of the parties to an assignment, all the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction must be taken into consideration.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) American First Federal, Inc. v. Gordon, supra, 584. Seaboard Surety Co.*, 240 Conn. 10, 17, 688 A.2d 306 (1997).

In interpreting the Agreement, “[w]e accord the language employed in the contract a rational construction based on its common, natural and ordinary meaning and usage as applied to the subject matter of the contract. . . . [When] there is definitive contract language, [however] the determination of what the parties intended by their contractual commitments is a question of law. . . . It is implicit in this rule that the determination as to whether contractual language is plain and unambiguous is itself a question of law . . . .” Gold v. Rowland, 325 Conn. 146, 157–58, 156 A.3d 477 (2017).

“A contract is unambiguous when its language is clear and conveys a definite and precise intent. . . . The court will not torture words to impart ambiguity where ordinary meaning leaves no room for ambiguity. . . . Moreover, the mere fact that the parties advance different interpretations of the language in question does not necessitate a conclusion that the language is ambiguous. . . . In contrast, a contract is ambiguous if the intent of the parties is not clear and certain from the language of the contract itself. . . . [A]ny ambiguity in a contract must emanate from the language used by the parties. . . . The contract must be viewed in its entirety, with each provision read in light of the other provisions . . . and every provision must be given effect if it is possible to do so. . . . If the language of the contract is susceptible to more than one reasonable interpretation, the contract is ambiguous.” (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Cruz v. Visual Perceptions, LLC, 311 Conn. 93, 102–103, 84 A.3d 828 (2014).

The Agreement’s language is unambiguous. It reflects that the plaintiff intended to assign its right to the insurance proceeds to Capital. Section 12 of the agreement provides: “[Liberty Transportation, Inc.] assumes all risk of loss or damage to the Premises until closing and [Capital] assumes same upon closing. If any damage to the premises shall not be restored prior to closing [Capital] shall be required to close title to the premises and shall receive in an amount not to exceed the purchase price all insurance monies recovered or recoverable on account of such damage. In the event of damage or loss [Liberty Transportation, Inc.] shall immediately notify [Capital] thereof and furnish to [Capital] a written statement of the amount of insurance, if any, payable on account thereof.” (Emphasis added.)

189 Conn. App. 595

Liberty Transportation, Inc. v. Massachusetts Bay Insurance Co.

---

The express and unambiguous language of § 12 evinces the fact that Capital—to the exclusion of the plaintiff—would solely possess the right to insurance proceeds that are “recovered or recoverable” on the basis of any unrestored damage to the premises. This fact compels the conclusion that the plaintiff intended to assign its right to such proceeds to Capital. Accordingly, the first element of a valid assignment is satisfied.

Moreover, the subject matter of the assignment between the plaintiff and Capital is adequately identified. As previously stated, § 12 of the agreement provides in relevant part: “If any damage to the premises shall not be restored prior to closing [Capital] shall be required to close title to the premises and shall receive in an amount not to exceed the purchase price all insurance monies recovered or recoverable on account of such damage.” The unambiguous language of § 12 describes what is being transferred (the right to all insurance proceeds that are recovered or recoverable on the basis of any unrestored damage to the premises) and to whom it is being transferred (Capital). In light of these details, the subject matter of the assignment between the plaintiff and Capital is capable of identification. Accordingly, the second element of a valid assignment is satisfied.

In sum, the two elements of a valid assignment are satisfied in the present case because the express and unambiguous language of § 12 of the Agreement (1) compels the conclusion that the plaintiff intended to assign its right to the insurance proceeds to Capital, and (2) adequately identifies the subject matter of the assignment, the right to all insurance proceeds that are recovered or recoverable on the basis of any unrestored damage to the premises. Accordingly, the plaintiff validly assigned its right to such proceeds to Capital pursuant to agreement.

---

Liberty Transportation, Inc. v. Massachusetts Bay Insurance Co.

The plaintiff argues that it did not assign its right to the insurance proceeds because the property damage for which the insurance proceeds are sought occurred before the plaintiff and Capital entered into the Agreement, and § 12 of the Agreement does not cover property damage that occurred before the Agreement was executed.

As stated previously, § 12 of the Agreement provides in relevant part: “If any damage to the premises shall not be restored prior to closing [Capital] shall be required to close title to the premises and shall receive in an amount not to exceed the purchase price all insurance monies recovered or recoverable on account of such damage.” (Emphasis added.) Section 12 does not expressly draw a distinction between unrestored damage to the premises that occurred before the execution of the Agreement, and such damage that occurred after the plaintiff and Capital entered into the Agreement. Moreover, the use of the word “any” to modify the phrase “damage to the premises” has the effect of broadening § 12 to cover unrestored damage to the premises, regardless of whether such damage occurred either before or after the Agreement was executed by the plaintiff and Capital. See Salce v. Wolczek, 314 Conn. 675, 686, 104 A.3d 694 (2014). Accordingly, the plaintiff’s first argument is inconsistent with the plain language of § 12.

The plaintiff also asserts that the interest which the plaintiff retained in the property’s rental units pursuant to § 17 of the Agreement provides the plaintiff with standing in the present case. Any property (leasehold) interest that the plaintiff retained in the rental units is separate and distinct from any contractual right that the plaintiff allegedly has in the insurance proceeds. In the present case, the plaintiff is seeking to vindicate its alleged contractual right in the insurance proceeds, not a purported property interest. Thus, the alleged interest

---

Liberty Transportation, Inc. v. Massachusetts Bay Insurance Co.

that the plaintiff retained in the property's rental units does not provide the plaintiff with standing in the present case.

The plaintiff also argues, without documentation, that there is evidence of a separate agreement between the plaintiff and Capital concerning the damage to the two units. The Agreement provides, in paragraph 18, that it may not be modified, except in writing, and signed by the parties thereto. In addition, it contains an integration clause, in paragraph 21, which states, "This agreement contains the entire contract between the parties hereto and no oral statements or promises and no understandings not embodied in this writing shall be valid or binding."

The statute of frauds, General Statutes § 52-550,<sup>1</sup> bars actions based on agreements pertaining to real property which are not in writing and signed by the party to be charged. See Deutsche Bank Trust Co. Americas v. DeGennaro, 149 Conn. App. 784, 788, 89 A.3d 969 (2014) (modification of written agreement must be in writing to satisfy statute of frauds).

The plaintiff's president's deposition testimony concerning an agreement involving a separate arrangement is unavailing. "The parol evidence rule is a substantive rule of contract law that prohibits the use of extrinsic evidence to vary or contradict the terms of an integrated written contract." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Sims v. Honda Motor Co., 225 Conn. 401, 416, 623 A.2d 995 (1993). "[O]ne purpose of the parol evidence rule is to secure business stability." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 416–17. As stated above, no written, separate agreement has been provided to the court. Rather,

<sup>1</sup> General Statutes § 52-550 (a) provides in relevant part: "No civil action may be maintained in the following cases unless the agreement, or a memorandum of the agreement, is made in writing and signed by the party, or the agent of the party, to be charged . . . (4) upon any agreement for the sale of real property or any interest in or concerning real property . . . ."

608                      APRIL, 2019                      189 Conn. App. 595

Liberty Transportation, Inc. v. Massachusetts Bay Insurance Co.

as stated above, the Agreement must be given effect according to its terms.

Thus, the plaintiff lacks standing in the present case because, by virtue of the assignment, it has no legal interest in alleged insurance proceeds that are due and payable on account of damage to the premises.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the defendant's motion to dismiss is granted. It is so ordered.
