

STATE OF CONNECTICUT v. RASHAD MOON
(AC 42130)

Lavine, Elgo and Pellegrino, Js.

Syllabus

Convicted of the crimes of felony murder, robbery in the first degree, and conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree, the defendant appealed. The defendant's conviction stemmed from an incident in which the defendant and M attempted to rob the victim, F, of two computer tablets he had advertised for sale via an internet posting. Upon meeting the defendant and M to sell the tablets, F was shot while he was sitting in his car near the defendant's home and, subsequently, died from his injuries. On appeal, the defendant claimed, inter alia, that the trial court erred in providing the jury with a supplemental instruction regarding the use of force element of robbery in response to a question from the jury. Held:

1. The court did not err when it provided the jury with a supplemental instruction in response to its question regarding the use of force element of robbery in the first degree: the defendant's claim that the court introduced a new theory of liability, namely, accessorial liability, when it added the phrase "another participant" to the instructions on the use of physical force element of robbery in the first degree was unavailing, as the statute (§ 53a-134 [a]) governing robbery in the first degree, which provides that a person may be guilty of robbery in the first degree if he or another participant in the crime uses or threatens the use of a dangerous instrument, provides for both principal and accessorial liability, and, thus, the court, by adding the phrase "another participant," tailored the instruction so that it more closely mirrored the statute, and its supplemental instruction was adapted to the state's theory of the case that the defendant was a participant in the robbery; moreover, the supplemental instruction did not invade the province of the jury or suggest a preferred verdict, as it appropriately clarified an element of an existing charge against the defendant, was a proper statement of the law and used permissive language, which made it clear that the court was not instructing the jury to find that the defendant was a participant in the robbery.

State v. Moon

2. The defendant could not prevail on his claim that the court erred when it declined to poll the jurors on his affirmative defense to the felony murder charge, which was based on his claim that the applicable rule of practice (§ 42-31) requires the court to poll jurors on affirmative defenses, as the mandatory language of that provision expressly provides that the rule applies only to the jurors' verdict: where, as here, the court did not direct the jury to return any verdict other than a general one, the court was required only to poll the jurors concerning whether they found the defendant unanimously guilty or not guilty of the charges against him and not whether they found that he had proved the affirmative defense, and because the jury instructions made clear that, to find the defendant guilty of felony murder, the jury had to find, unanimously, that he did not prove the affirmative defense, the clerk, in polling the jurors on felony murder, necessarily polled them on the affirmative defense; moreover, requiring that jurors be polled regarding the affirmative defense was analogous to providing the jurors with interrogatories, which was not generally recognized as a part of Connecticut's criminal procedure.
3. The trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence two spent shell casings that were found in the defendant's house two days after the shooting; although the defendant claimed that because there was no connection between the shell casings and the shooting, the casings were impermissible evidence of his criminal propensity, the state introduced evidence connecting the shell casings to the shooting death of the victim, including testimony that the shell casings came from a .22 caliber gun, a statement from a witness that the witness had seen the defendant with a .22 or .25 caliber gun, and testimony that the victim's wound was consistent with the type of wound created by a bullet fired from a small caliber gun, and the shell casings were relevant to the crime charges because they had a tendency to prove that the defendant owned a firearm and, therefore, had the means to commit a crime involving a small caliber gun.
4. The defendant could not prevail on his unpreserved claim that the trial court improperly instructed the jury on conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree when it omitted the intent element required for the underlying crime of robbery in the first degree by failing to instruct the jury that it had to find that the defendant intended to commit a robbery while he or another participant was armed: because the court provided counsel with a meaningful opportunity to review the jury instructions when it gave the parties a copy of the proposed jury instructions two days prior to instructing the jury, defense counsel did not express any concerns regarding the instructions on conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree and stated that the defendant did not need more time to review the proposed jury instructions, and defense counsel failed to object after the court instructed the jury on conspiracy, the defendant waived his instructional claim; moreover, the defendant's claim that the court's instruction on conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree

70

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 68

State v. Moon

constituted plain error was unavailing, as the court instructed the jury on the intent requirement for conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree when it read from the conspiracy statute and set forth the elements of the crime, and it provided the jury with detailed instructions on the intent element of conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree, which made clear that the intent required for the charge was the intent to commit the underlying crime of robbery in the first degree and that the defendant had to intend for a participant in the crime to be armed with a deadly weapon.

Argued April 11—officially released August 27, 2019

Procedural History

Information charging the defendant with the crimes of felony murder, robbery in the first degree, and conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree, brought to the Superior Court in the judicial district of Hartford, geographical area number fourteen, and tried to the jury before Baldini, J.; verdict and judgment of guilty, from which the defendant appealed. Affirmed.

Pamela S. Nagy, assistant public defender, for the appellant (defendant).

Laurie N. Feldman, special deputy assistant state's attorney, with whom, on the brief, were Gail P. Hardy, state's attorney, and David L. Zagaja, senior assistant state's attorney, for the appellee (state).

Opinion

PELLEGRINO, J. The defendant, Rashad Moon, appeals from the judgment of conviction, rendered after a jury trial, of felony murder in violation of General Statutes § 53a-54c, robbery in the first degree in violation of General Statutes § 53a-134 (a) (2), and conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree in violation of General Statutes §§ 53a-48 and 53a-134 (a) (2). On appeal, the defendant claims that the trial court improperly (1) instructed the jury on accomplice liability, (2) failed to poll the jurors on the defendant's affirmative defense, (3) admitted into evidence two spent shell casings that were unconnected to the crime, and (4)

192 Conn. App. 68

AUGUST, 2019

71

State v. Moon

instructed the jury on conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree without instructing it on the intent required for robbery in the first degree. We disagree and, accordingly, affirm the judgment of the trial court.

On the basis of the evidence adduced at trial, the jury reasonably could have found the following facts. In May, 2013, the victim, Felix DeJesus, and his fiancée posted two T-Mobile Springboard tablets for sale on Craigslist. The Craigslist posting stated that the tablets were being sold for $300 each or $500 for both of them and included the victim's phone number. On May 8, 2013, at approximately 7 p.m., a prospective buyer of the tablets called the victim. The prospective buyer said that he did not have a car and asked the victim to meet him in Hartford so that he could purchase the tablets. The victim agreed to travel to Hartford and, shortly after 7 p.m., the victim left his home in Cromwell with the tablets.

At approximately 7:45 p.m., a resident of the neighborhood where the crime occurred, Gloria Therrien, observed the victim park his car in front of 16 Allendale Road. From inside her home, Therrien saw two men approach the car and stand at its driver's side window. One of the men spoke to the victim through the front driver's side window while the other man stood next to him. Therrien heard a gunshot and saw the two men run away from the car, using a cut through that connected Allendale Road to Catherine Street. Therrien then went outside and walked toward the victim's car. She observed that the car windows were open and that the victim was in the driver's seat of the car "jerking . . . and gurgling." Therrien asked some children who were nearby to call 911 and report that someone had been shot.

The police arrived at the scene at approximately 8 p.m. When Jeffrey Moody, an officer with the Hartford

Police Department (department), arrived, he saw the victim's car and noticed that its engine was running and that the victim was inside. Moody approached the car and found the victim unresponsive. Thereafter, emergency services took the victim to Hartford Hospital, where he died of a single gunshot wound to the head at approximately 3:46 a.m.

Chris Reeder, a detective with the department, arrived at the scene at approximately 8:30 p.m., after the victim had been taken to Hartford Hospital. Reeder searched the interior of the victim's car and found a T-Mobile Springboard Tablet and a white Samsung cell phone. The police took possession of both items.

On May 9, 2013, the police extracted data from the cell phone, which they determined had belonged to the victim. The data extracted from the cell phone included a series of text messages and phone calls between the victim and a cell phone number that belonged to Marvin Mathis, an individual who resided near the scene of the crime. Around the time of the murder, there were text messages between Mathis and the victim in which Mathis instructed the victim to meet him at 16 Allendale Road.

That same day, Reeder went to speak with Mathis at his home on Allendale Road. Mathis denied having any knowledge of the shooting and stated that he was asleep at home when the crime occurred. Mathis also stated that he was with the defendant from approximately 6 to 7:30 p.m. on the night of the shooting and that while they were together, the defendant borrowed his phone.

Mathis allowed Reeder to view his cell phone and the text messages on the device. The text messages on Mathis' cell phone matched the text messages that the police had extracted from the victim's cell phone. Mathis, however, denied sending the messages and stated that the defendant must have sent them. Reeder

192 Conn. App. 68

AUGUST, 2019

73

State v. Moon

also observed that the call log on Mathis' cell phone revealed that, at approximately the time of the shooting, there were calls between Mathis and the defendant. On May 8, 2013, there were calls between the defendant and Mathis at 6:02, 7:51, 7:52 and 9:53 p.m.

On May 12, 2013, Reeder spoke with the defendant and the defendant's girlfriend, Brittany Hegwood. Hegwood informed the police that on the night of the shooting, she witnessed Mathis and the defendant walk "down Catherine Street toward Hillside [Avenue]" together and that when the defendant returned approximately five minutes later he stated "[Mathis] just shot somebody."

The defendant also provided the police with a statement in which he admitted that he was with Mathis on the night of the shooting and that he went with Mathis to meet the victim. The defendant stated that Mathis told the defendant that he was going to buy "some stuff" from the victim. The defendant further stated that he stood approximately thirty feet away from the victim's car while Mathis spoke with the victim through the driver's side window. The defendant stated that he looked away from Mathis and heard a gunshot, at which point he and Mathis ran away from the car to the defendant's house on Catherine Street.

As part of their investigation, the police obtained a search warrant for the defendant's cell phone records. The defendant's cell phone records revealed calls between the defendant and a phone number belonging to an individual by the name of Jahvon Thompson on May 10 and 14, 2013.

On May 23, 2014, approximately one year after the shooting, Thompson, who was under arrest at the time, spoke with Reeder. Thompson informed Reeder that he and the defendant initially had planned to rob the victim because they "were broke." Thompson further stated that “a day or two” before the crime he, the defendant, and Mathis were together and that the defendant was texting the victim on Mathis’ phone. Thompson stated that ultimately he did not participate in the robbery because “something came up.”

Additionally, in May of 2014, an individual by the name of Tyrell Hightower left three messages on a police tip line, in which he indicated that he had information about a homicide that had occurred on Allendale Road one year earlier. On June 2, 2014, Reeder met with Hightower at Hartford Correctional Center, where Hightower was incarcerated. During the meeting, Hightower informed Reeder that the defendant had confessed to him that he and Mathis were involved in the murder of the victim. Hightower further stated that the defendant had informed him that it was a “robbery that went bad” and that Mathis had shot the victim.

In late June of 2014, the police arrested the defendant. After a jury trial, the defendant was convicted of felony murder, robbery in the first degree, and conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree. The court sentenced the defendant to a total effective sentence of forty-nine years of incarceration. This appeal followed. Additional facts and procedural history will be set forth as necessary.

I

The defendant first claims that “[t]he trial court committed harmful error when, for the first time during deliberations, [in response to a question from the jury] it instructed the jurors that [the] defendant could be convicted of robbery even if another person was the one to use force” The defendant argues that the court’s supplemental instruction suggested a verdict in favor of the state, deprived him of the opportunity to defend against this theory of liability and violated his right to have the jurors properly instructed on the law. We disagree.

192 Conn. App. 68

AUGUST, 2019

75

State v. Moon

We begin with the applicable standard of review and the legal principles relevant to this claim. “[I]ndividual jury instructions should not be judged in artificial isolation . . . but must be viewed in the context of the overall charge. . . . The pertinent test is whether the charge, read in its entirety, fairly presents the case to the jury in such a way that injustice is not done to either party under the established rules of law. . . . Thus, [t]he whole charge must be considered from the standpoint of its effect on the [jurors] in guiding them to the proper verdict . . . and not critically dissected in a microscopic search for possible error. . . . Accordingly, [i]n reviewing a constitutional challenge to the trial court’s instruction, we must consider the jury charge as a whole to determine whether it is reasonably possible that the instruction misled the jury. . . . In other words, we must consider whether the instructions [in totality] are sufficiently correct in law, adapted to the issues and ample for the guidance of the jury. . . . A challenge to the validity of jury instructions presents a question of law over which [we have] plenary review.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Berrios, 187 Conn. App. 661, 705–706, 203 A.3d 571, cert. denied, 331 Conn. 917, 204 A.3d 1159 (2019). This standard of review also applies to supplemental instructions. State v. Miller, 36 Conn. App. 506, 515, 651 A.2d 1318, cert. denied, 232 Conn. 912, 654 A.2d 357 (1995).

Practice Book § 42-27 provides: “If the jury, after retiring for deliberations, requests additional instructions, the judicial authority, after providing notice to the parties and an opportunity for suggestions by counsel, shall recall the jury to the courtroom and give additional instructions necessary to respond properly to the request or to direct the jury’s attention to a portion of the original instructions.”

The following additional facts and procedural history are relevant to this claim. Count two of the information charging the defendant alleged: “[O]n or about May 8, 2013 at 8:00 p.m. on Allendale Road in Hartford . . . while in the course of the commission of a robbery and in immediate flight therefrom, [the defendant] or another participant in the crime was armed with a deadly weapon.”

During closing argument, the state argued that the defendant was one of the two participants in the robbery and that it was legally irrelevant whether he or Mathis shot the victim. The prosecutor stated: “The one issue you have to analyze . . . is was [the defendant] a participant in the robbery”

After closing arguments, the court instructed the jury on the law relevant to the case, including the charge of robbery in the first degree.¹ The court began its instruction on robbery in the first degree by providing: “The defendant is charged in count two with robbery in the first degree in violation of General Statutes § 53a-134 (a) (2). The statute defining this offense reads in pertinent part as follows: A person is guilty of robbery in the first degree when in the course of the commission of the crime of robbery, or immediate flight therefrom, he, or another participant in the crime, is armed with a deadly weapon.”

The court stated the following with regard to the elements of robbery: “[T]he following are elements of robbery: (a) that the defendant was committing a larceny; (b) that the larceny was accomplished by the use, or threatened immediate use, of physical force upon another person; (c) for the purpose of preventing or overcoming resistance to the taking of the property, or to the retention thereof immediately after the taking, or compelling the owner of such property or another person to deliver up the property.”²

¹ Neither the state nor the defendant requested that the court give an instruction on accessorial liability.

² This instruction was set forth on page 13 of the jury instructions.

192 Conn. App. 68

AUGUST, 2019

77

State v. Moon

Under the heading “(b) Use or Threat of Use of Physical Force,” the court provided: “The second element of robbery is that the larceny was accomplished by the use or threatened use of physical force.”³

Under the heading “conclusion,” the court provided: “In summary, the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt the following elements of robbery in the first degree: (1) the defendant was committing a larceny, and (2) that he used physical force or threatened the use of physical force for the purpose of preventing or overcoming resistance to the taking of property or to the retention of property immediately after the taking or compelling the owner of the property or another person to deliver up the property or to engage in other conduct that aids in the commission of larceny; and (3) that in the course of the commission of the robbery or immediate flight from the crime, the defendant or another participant in the crime was armed with a deadly weapon.”⁴ (Emphasis added.)

The court provided the jurors with a paper copy of the jury instructions for their use during deliberations. During deliberations, the jury sent the court the following note: “Does ‘the use or threat of use of physical force’ element of robbery in the first degree require a finding that the defendant personally used or threatened the use of force or is it sufficient as to the ‘use or threat of use of physical force’ element if, in the course of the larceny, force was threatened by any party to the larceny?”

Explanation. The conclusion on [page] 17 of the jury charge says ‘(2) that he used physical force or threatened the use of physical force.’ On [page] 13, element I and [page] 15, section (b) use or threat of use of physical force, it says . . . ‘that the larceny was accomplished by the use or threatened immediate use, of physical force upon another person.’” (Emphasis in original.)

³ This instruction was set forth on page 15 of the jury instructions.

⁴ This instruction was set forth on page 17 of the jury instructions.

Upon receiving the note from the jury, the court discussed the matter with counsel. Although the court stated that it believed that the instruction on robbery in the first degree was proper, it nonetheless proposed responding to the jury’s note by adding the phrase “another participant” to the use of force instruction on pages 15 and 17. The court explained that it was its belief that the addition of this language would clarify that the jury could find the defendant guilty of robbery in the first degree if he or another participant in the crime used or threatened the use of physical force.

Defense counsel objected, stating that the proposed clarification would serve as an “unfair invasion of the province of the jury” and improperly introduce the concept of accomplice liability. Defense counsel argued that the original instruction properly stated the law and that there was nothing the court needed to clarify or correct. Instead of providing the jury with additional clarifying instructions, defense counsel proposed rereading the original instructions or, alternatively, adding the proposed language and rereading the entirety of the instructions.

Over the defendant’s objection, the court decided to provide the jury with the proposed clarification. The court explained that pursuant to State v. Davis, 255 Conn. 782, 791 n.8, 772 A.2d 559 (2001), it did not need to separately instruct on accessorial liability for robbery in the first degree because the statute, on its face, extends to principals and accessories. Furthermore, the court stated that it believed simply rereading the charge would not respond to the jury’s question.

The court called the jury to the courtroom and stated: “First, I believe that the instruction that I have given

192 Conn. App. 68

AUGUST, 2019

79

State v. Moon

you on page 13 is the correct recitation of the law. I further believe that the law that I instructed on page 15 and page 17 is also the correct recitation of the law. I do want to give you, by point of clarification, language that you can consider which would be consistent with all of the instructions that I gave you. With regard to page 15, under paragraph (c) ‘Purpose of use of force.’⁵ You may consider another participant of the crime. So the language would enable you to consider, if you find that the defendant or another participant of the crime used physical force or threatened . . . immediate use of force in committing a larceny you must then determine whether such physical force was used or threatened for the purpose of and the language continues from there. . . .

“On page 17, consistent with the instructions that I gave you, and the clarification that I just gave you, under ‘conclusion,’ under paragraph two the law allows you to consider another participant in the crime. The language under the conclusion by way of clarification, therefore, enables you to consider that he, meaning the defendant, or another participant in the crime used physical force or threatened the use of physical force for the purpose of preventing or overcoming resistance to the taking of property, or to the retention of property immediately after the taking or compelling the owner of the property or another person to deliver up the property or to engage in other conduct that aids in the commission of larceny.” (Emphasis added.)

On appeal, the defendant concedes that the court was required to address the jury’s question, but argues that the supplemental instruction improperly introduced a new theory of liability, namely, accessory liability.⁶ In support of his argument, the defendant cites numerous cases from other jurisdictions, which, he argues, demonstrate that it is error for a court to introduce a different theory of liability, and in particular accessory liability, for the first time in a supplemental instruction. See, e.g., United States v. Gaskins, 849 F.2d 454 (9th Cir. 1988); People v. Millsap, 724 N.E.2d 942 (Ill. 2000); People v. Jamison, 566 N.E.2d 58 (Ill. App. 1991); State v. Hover, 362 P.3d 1125 (Kan. App. 2015); State v. Johnson, 795 S.E.2d 171 (S.C. App. 2016); State v. Ransom, 785 P.2d 469 (Wash. App. 1990). In citing these cases, the defendant presupposes that the court, introduced a new theory of liability when it added the phrase “another participant” to the instructions on the use of physical force element of robbery in the first degree. We disagree.

⁵ Although the note from the jury asked about the instruction in section (b) of page 15, the court clarified the language in section (c) of page 15. Both sections of the instructions, however, addressed the use of force element of robbery.

General Statutes § 53a-134 (a) provides in relevant part: “A person is guilty of robbery in the first degree when, in the course of the commission of the crime of

⁶ In his brief, the defendant argues that the introduction of this theory was improper because it deprived him of the opportunity to argue against the theory at closing argument and, therefore, defend against the theory at trial. At oral argument, however, the defendant stated “the issue here is not notice.” Even if we assume that the defendant did not intend to concede the issue of notice, we conclude that the defendant was on notice of his potential liability for the acts of Mathis.

The allegations in the information provided notice to the defendant that he could be found liable for Mathis’ acts. The information, in charging the defendant with robbery in the first degree, alleged that the defendant was liable because “he or another participant in the crime was armed with a deadly weapon” while in the course of the commission of a robbery and immediate flight therefrom. (Emphasis added.) Additionally, throughout trial, the state’s theory was that the defendant was a participant in the crime, even though he might not have been the one who shot the victim. Thereafter, during closing argument, the state made clear that it was arguing that the defendant might not have been the shooter, but that he was a participant in the crime. Moreover, our case law makes clear that “a defendant, charged with an offense, is on notice that he may be convicted as an accessory to that offense.” State v. Walton, 34 Conn. App. 223, 230, 641 A.2d 391, cert. denied, 230 Conn. 902, 644 A.2d 916 (1994).

robbery as defined in section 53a-133 or of immediate flight therefrom, he or another participant in the crime . . . (2) is armed with a deadly weapon” (Emphasis added.) The plain language of the statute states that an individual may be guilty of robbery in the first degree if he or another participant in the crime uses or threatens the use of a dangerous instrument. In State v. Davis, supra, 255 Conn. 791, n.8, our Supreme Court concluded that § 53a-134 applies to both principals and accessories, stating: “[O]ur robbery statute, § 53a-134, includes explicit accessory language within the text of the statute. . . . Because the robbery statute applies to principals and accessories on its face, the court did not need to explain the concept of accessorial liability to the jury as it relates to the robbery charge.” (Emphasis added.) Our Supreme Court also noted that our law makes no “practical distinction between the terms ‘accessory’ and ‘principal’ for the purposes of determining criminal liability.” Id., 789.

The defendant argues that Davis does not control in the present case because it is factually distinguishable. The defendant points to the fact that the court in Davis instructed on accessorial liability with regard to another statute, whereas the court in the present case did not instruct on accessorial liability at all. The lack of such an instruction with regard to another charge in the present case, however, is not a significant distinction because § 53a-134 provides for both principal and accessorial liability. Davis recognized this, stating that an accessory instruction with regard to robbery in the first degree was unnecessary because the robbery statute “includes explicit accessory language within the text of the statute.” Id., 791, n.8. Thus, we conclude that the defendant’s efforts to distinguish Davis are unavailing.

Moreover, even if we assume that Davis is distinguishable, other cases from our appellate courts recognize that § 53a-134 applies to both principals and accomplices. State v. Crump, 201 Conn. 489, 495, 518 A.2d 378 (1986) (concluding “fact that the defendant was not formally charged as an accessory does not preclude his being so convicted” and defendant could be convicted of robbery because evidence supported “conclusion of the trial court of the defendant’s complicity as either a principal or an accessory”); State v. Harper, 184 Conn. App. 24, 32, 194 A.3d 846 (“the offense of robbery in the first degree in violation of § 53a-134 [a] [2] does not require proof that a defendant intended to possess a deadly weapon”), cert. denied, 330 Conn. 936, 195 A.3d 386 (2018); State v. Latorre, 51 Conn. App. 541, 552, 723 A.2d 1166 (1999) (evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of robbery, despite lack of instruction on accomplice liability, because defendant acted in concert with another).

In the present case, because § 53a-134 provides that a defendant can be found guilty in the first degree if he or another participant in the crime uses force, the court, by adding the phrase “another participant,” tailored the instruction so that it more closely mirrored the statute. Additionally, the court’s supplemental instruction was adapted to the state’s theory of the case. Throughout trial, the state’s theory of the case was that the defendant was a participant in the robbery. The state explicitly so stated during closing argument when it repeatedly argued that it was legally irrelevant whether the defendant or Mathis shot the victim because there was ample evidence that the defendant was a participant in the crime and had conspired with the defendant to plan the robbery. Specifically, the state argued: “Who actually killed [the victim] is not important. . . . You don’t need that issue to resolve the elements of the charges that you have before you.”

Finally, we are unpersuaded by the defendant’s argument that the supplemental instruction invaded the province of the jury or suggested a preferred verdict.

192 Conn. App. 68

AUGUST, 2019

83

State v. Moon

In support of this argument, the defendant cites to the concurrence in State v. Devoid, 188 Vt. 445, 453–54, 8 A.3d 1076 (2010). Devoid, however, is factually distinguishable from the present case in that it involved a supplemental instruction that introduced the crime of attempt when the defendant had not, in any way, been charged with attempt. Id. Furthermore, the court in Devoid noted that the supplemental instruction did not clarify an element of an existing charge, which would have been within the trial court’s discretion. Id., 455. By contrast, the supplemental instruction in the present case appropriately clarified an element of an existing charge against the defendant. Moreover, the supplemental instruction in the present case was a proper statement of the law. State v. Turner, 181 Conn. App. 535, 571, 187 A.3d 454 (declining to review claim that legally correct response to jury question intruded on function of jury), cert. granted on other grounds, 330 Conn. 909, 139 A.3d 48 (2018). Finally, the supplemental instruction in the present case used permissive language, making it clear that the court was not instructing the jury to find that the defendant was a participant in the robbery.⁷

On the basis of the foregoing, we conclude that the court did not err when it provided the jury with a supplemental instruction in response to its question regarding the use of force element of robbery in the first degree.⁸

II

The defendant’s second claim is that the court erred by refusing to poll the jurors on the affirmative defense

⁷ The court stated: “You may consider another participant of the crime. So the language would enable you to consider, if you find that the defendant or another participant of the crime used physical force . . . in committing a larceny you must then determine whether such physical force was used” (Emphasis added.)

⁸ The defendant also argues that he was prejudiced by the court’s error. Although we conclude that the court did not err in providing the jury with the supplemental instruction, even if we assume, arguendo, that it did, any error was harmless given the strength of the evidence against the defendant.

to felony murder. The defendant argues that the court's refusal to poll the jurors on the affirmative defense to felony murder violated Practice Book § 42-31 and his right to a unanimous verdict. We disagree.

We begin with the applicable standard of review and the legal principles relevant to this claim. "The interpretation and application of a statute, and thus a Practice Book provision, involve a question of law over which our review is plenary. . . . When construing a statute, [o]ur fundamental objective is to ascertain and give effect to the apparent intent of the legislature. . . . In other words, we seek to determine, in a reasoned manner, the meaning of the statutory language as applied to the facts of [the] case, including the question of whether the language actually does apply. . . . In seeking to determine that meaning, General Statutes § 1-2z directs us first to consider the text of the statute itself and its relationship to other statutes. If, after examining such text and considering such relationship, the meaning of such text is plain and unambiguous and does not yield absurd or unworkable results, extratextual evidence of the meaning of the statute shall not be considered." (Citation omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Garvey v. Valencis, 177 Conn. App. 578, 583, 173 A.3d 51 (2017).

Practice Book § 42-31 provides: "After a verdict has been returned and before the jury has been discharged, the jury shall be polled at the request of any party or upon the judicial authority's own motion. The poll shall be conducted by the clerk of the court by asking each juror individually whether the verdict announced is such juror's verdict. If upon the poll there is not unanimous concurrence, the jury may be directed to retire for further deliberations or it may be discharged."

The following additional facts and procedural history are relevant to this claim. On December 2, 2016, after

192 Conn. App. 68

AUGUST, 2019

85

State v. Moon

closing arguments, the court instructed the jury on the elements of felony murder: “One, that the defendant with one or more . . . other persons committed the crime of robbery. Two, that the defendant or another participant in the crime of robbery as instructed caused the death of another person. Three, that the defendant or another participant caused the death while in the course of and in furtherance of the commission of the crime of robbery or an immediate flight therefrom. . . . If you unanimously find that the state has proved all elements, as I’ve instructed you, beyond a reasonable doubt, your verdict would be guilty to one count felony murder.”

Immediately thereafter, the court instructed the jury on the affirmative defense to felony murder, stating: “The evidence in this case raises what the law calls an affirmative defense. This affirmative defense applies only to count one felony murder. An affirmative defense constitutes a separate issue or circumstances that mitigate the degree of or eliminate[s] criminality or punishment. . . .

“For you to find the defendant not guilty of this charge the defendant must prove the following elements by a preponderance of evidence. . . .

“The first element is the defendant did not commit the homicidal act or in any way solicit, request, command, importune, cause or aid in the commission of it. . . .

“The second element is that the defendant was not armed with a deadly weapon or any dangerous instrument. . . .

“The third element is that the defendant had no reasonable grounds to believe that any other participant was armed with such a weapon or instrument. A reasonable ground to believe means that a reasonable person in the defendant’s situation viewing the circumstances from the defendant's point of view would have shared that belief. . . .

"The fourth element is that the defendant had no reasonable ground to believe that any other participant intended to engage in conduct likely to result in death or serious physical injury."

On December 5, 2016, the court informed the parties that the jury had reached its verdict. Defense counsel asked the court to poll the jurors "with respect to each count as well as with respect to the affirmative defense [to the charge of felony murder]." The state's attorney stated that he did not see any reason for the jurors to be polled on the affirmative defense. In response, defense counsel argued that it was proper to poll the jurors on the affirmative defense because they had been instructed that the affirmative defense requires unanimity. The court concluded that the jury would be polled only with regard to the three counts charged and not the affirmative defense because the defendant had not previously submitted a request for the jury to be polled on the affirmative defense and because "the verdicts whatever they may be will resolve the issues with regard to the affirmative defense."

The jury foreperson stated when polled by the clerk that the jury had found the defendant guilty of felony murder, robbery in the first degree and conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree. The clerk of court accepted the verdict and polled each juror individually with regard to the three counts. Each juror stated that he or she had found the defendant guilty of felony murder, robbery in the first degree, and conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree.

The defendant argues that Practice Book § 42-31 requires the court to poll jurors on affirmative defenses. Although the defendant argues that "verdict announced" includes affirmative defenses, he has failed

192 Conn. App. 68

AUGUST, 2019

87

State v. Moon

to direct our attention to any support for this assertion. Indeed, the mandatory language of the provision expressly provides that the rule applies only to the jurors' verdict. Moreover, in State v. Pare, 253 Conn. 611, 617, 755 A.2d 180 (2000), the case on which the defendant relies in support of his assertion that the court was required to poll the jury on the affirmative defense, the court did not take issue with the trial court's failure to poll the jurors on the defense of extreme emotional distress. Although the court in Pare concluded that the trial court committed reversible error when it failed to poll the jurors, the basis of its conclusion was the court's failure to poll each juror individually, not the court's failure to poll the jurors with regard to the defense of extreme emotional distress. Id., 638. By contrast, in the present case, the clerk individually polled each juror with regard to all three of the charges against the defendant.

Moreover, requiring that jurors be polled regarding the affirmative defense is analogous to providing the jurors with interrogatories, which is not generally recognized as a part of Connecticut's criminal procedure. See Practice Book § 42-29 (“[t]he verdict shall be general unless otherwise directed by the judicial authority, but if the judicial authority instructs the jury regarding the defense of mental disease or defect, the jury, if it so finds, shall declare the finding in its verdict”); State v. Anderson, 158 Conn. App. 315, 333, 118 A.3d 728 (“we will not probe into the logic or reasoning of the jury's deliberations or open the door to interminable speculation”), cert. granted, 319 Conn. 907, 123 A.3d 438 (2015) (appeal withdrawn on May 5, 2015), and cert. granted on other grounds, 319 Conn. 908, 123 A.3d 437 (2015) (appeal withdrawn May 4, 2016); State v. Blake, 63 Conn. App. 536, 543–44, 777 A.2d 709 (concluding trial court properly denied defendant's request to submit to jury interrogatory on affirmative defense), cert.

denied, 257 Conn. 911, 782 A.2d 134 (2001). In the present case, because the court did not direct the jury to return any verdict other than a general one, the court was required only to poll the jurors on whether they found the defendant unanimously guilty or not guilty of the charges against him and not whether they found that the defendant had proved the affirmative defense.

Finally, the jury instructions made clear that, in order to find the defendant guilty of felony murder, the jury had to find, unanimously, that the defendant did not prove the affirmative defense. “[I]t is well established that, [i]n the absence of a showing that the jury failed or declined to follow the court’s instructions, we presume that it heeded them.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Hurley v. Heart Physicians, P.C., 298 Conn. 371, 401, 3 A.3d 892 (2010). The defendant does not argue that the jury failed to follow any instructions, therefore, we must assume that the jury followed the court’s instructions on felony murder. Because the court instructed the jury that it had to find that the defendant did not satisfy the elements of the affirmative defense before finding the defendant guilty of felony murder, the clerk, in polling the jurors on felony murder, necessarily polled them on the affirmative defense.

On the basis of the foregoing, we conclude that the court did not err when it declined to poll the jurors on the affirmative defense.

III

The defendant’s third claim is that the court abused its discretion by admitting into evidence two spent shell casings that were unconnected to the shooting. The defendant argues that the court’s error allowed the jury to assume that the defendant was a violent person who must have possessed the murder weapon. We disagree.

192 Conn. App. 68

AUGUST, 2019

89

State v. Moon

We begin with the standard of review and legal principles relevant to this claim. “Relevant evidence is evidence that has a logical tendency to aid the trier in the determination of an issue. . . . Evidence is relevant if it tends to make the existence or nonexistence of any other fact more probable or less probable than it would be without such evidence. . . . To be relevant, the evidence need not exclude all other possibilities; it is sufficient if it tends to support the conclusion [for which it is offered], even to a slight degree. . . . Evidence is not rendered inadmissible because it is not conclusive. All that is required is that the evidence tend[s] to support a relevant fact even to a slight degree, so long as it is not prejudicial or merely cumulative. . . .

“Although relevant, evidence may be excluded by the trial court if the court determines that the prejudicial effect of the evidence outweighs its probative value. . . . Of course, [a]ll adverse evidence is damaging to one’s case, but it is inadmissible only if it creates undue prejudice so that it threatens an injustice were it to be admitted. . . . The test for determining whether evidence is unduly prejudicial is not whether it is damaging to the defendant but whether it will improperly arouse the emotions of the jury. . . . Reversal is required only [if] an abuse of discretion is manifest or [if an] injustice appears to have been done.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Gray-Brown, 188 Conn. App. 446, 460–61, 204 A.3d 1161, cert. denied, 331 Conn. 922, 2015 A.3d 568 (2019).

“When an improper evidentiary ruling is not constitutional in nature, the defendant bears the burden of demonstrating that the error was harmful. . . . [A] nonconstitutional error is harmless when an appellate court has a fair assurance that the error did not substantially affect the verdict. . . . [O]ur determination [of whether] the defendant was harmed by the trial court’s . . . [evidentiary ruling] is guided by the various factors that we have articulated as relevant [to] the inquiry of evidentiary harmlessness . . . such as the importance of the . . . testimony in the [state's] case, whether the testimony was cumulative, the presence or absence of evidence corroborating or contradicting the testimony . . . on material points, the extent of cross-examination otherwise permitted, and, of course, the overall strength of the [state's] case. . . . Most importantly, we must examine the impact of the evidence on the trier of fact and the result of the trial.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Grant, 179 Conn. App. 81, 90, 178 A.3d 437, cert. denied, 328 Conn. 910, 178 A.3d 1042 (2018).

The following additional facts and procedural history are relevant to this claim. During trial, Reeder testified that no gun was recovered and that the bullet fragment removed from the victim was not suitable for ballistics analysis. Reeder did testify, however, that the victim's wound was consistent with its having been made by a bullet fired from a small caliber weapon.⁹

During Reeder's testimony, the state sought to introduce into evidence two spent .22 shell casings found in the defendant's house two days after the shooting and argued that it had laid a foundation sufficient for their admission. In support of its proffer, the state pointed to Thompson's statement that the defendant owned a .22 or .25 caliber gun and that the defendant had told Thompson that he gave Mathis the gun. The state also argued that these casings were relevant on

⁹ As part of this claim that the testimony was inadmissible, the defendant, with respect to Reeder's testimony that the victim's gunshot wound was consistent with having been caused by a bullet from a small caliber weapon, refers to the fact that Reeder was not qualified as a ballistics expert. Although Reeder was not qualified as a ballistics expert, the defendant failed to timely object to this testimony and, therefore, this argument is not reviewable on appeal. State v. Fernando, 331 Conn. 201, 211–12, 202 A.3d 350 (2019).

192 Conn. App. 68

AUGUST, 2019

91

State v. Moon

the basis of Reeder's statement that a firearm of the kind the defendant allegedly possessed would eject a casing, yet no casings were found at the scene of the crime.

Defense counsel objected to the admission of the shell casings, arguing that there was nothing to tie them to the crime, other than the statement by Thompson that he had seen the defendant with a .22 or .25 caliber gun. He further argued that because no evidence had been presented as to when the casings were fired, they could have been fired years before the commission of the crime.

After hearing both parties, the court allowed the casings to be admitted as an exhibit, stating: "[R]obbery in the first degree and the conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree . . . [require the state] to prove beyond a reasonable doubt . . . that the individual or any individual who participated in the crime was armed with a deadly weapon. Certainly the possession of casings in the defendant's home would be relative to the issue of whether or not the defendant may have possessed or had access to a firearm. . . . I've considered the fact that the testimony not only on direct and on cross-examination has discussed the issue of the type of gun that may have been used in this incident as well as the statement that has just come in with regard to witness Thompson addresses the issue of a revolver, specifically a low caliber revolver. . . . I am going to allow the admissibility of those casings, and allow those introduced into evidence through this witness."

Thereafter, Reeder resumed testifying and read a statement Thompson made to the police on May 23, 2014.¹⁰ Thompson stated in relevant part: "[The defendant] told me he gave [Mathis] his gun. I had seen [the defendant] with this gun before. It is a revolver, a little .22 or maybe a .25.” Reeder then testified that he executed a search warrant of the defendant’s home on May 10, 2013, in search of “the stolen tablet, ammunition . . . firearms, [and] cellular phones.” During the search, he found two .22 caliber shell casings in a “small closet or pantry at the backside of the kitchen . . . sitting on top of [a] shelf.” At this point, the state introduced the casings as a full exhibit.

¹⁰ The court admitted Thompson's statement for substantive purposes as a prior inconsistent statement under State v. Whelan, 200 Conn. 743, 753, 513 A.2d 86, cert. denied, 479 U.S. 994, 107 S. Ct 597, 93 L. Ed. 2d 598 (1986).

The defendant argues on appeal that because there was no connection between the shell casings and the shooting, the casings are impermissible evidence of the defendant’s criminal propensity. “Evidence as to articles found in the possession of an accused person subsequent to the time of the commission of a crime for which he is being tried is admissible only if it tends to establish a fact in issue or to corroborate other direct evidence in the case; otherwise the law does not sanction the admission of evidence that the defendant possessed even instruments or articles adapted to the commission of other crimes. . . . The reason is analogous to that applicable to evidence of other crimes committed by a defendant but unrelated to the offense under investigation.” State v. Acklin, 171 Conn. 105, 114, 368 A.2d 212 (1976) (concluding masks and ropes seized from defendants’ car were unrelated to crime because “state offered no evidence to show that the defendants used the masks and rope in the commission of the robbery with which they were charged, or that they had contemplated their use in that robbery”); see State v. Girolamo, 197 Conn. 201, 205–209, 496 A.2d 948 (1985) (court erred by admitting into evidence two automatic handguns seized at defendant’s home that “ha[d] no direct relevance to the issues in the case”); State v. Maner, 147 Conn. App. 761, 768–69, 83 A.3d 1182 (trial court abused its discretion by admitting into evidence firearm determined not to be firearm used in

192 Conn. App. 68

AUGUST, 2019

93

State v. Moon

crime charged), cert. denied, 311 Conn. 935, 88 A.3d 550 (2014); State v. Llera, 114 Conn. App. 337, 339, 969 A.2d 225 (2009) (trial court erred by allowing testimony about defendant's possession of Glock handgun when weapon used in crime charged was Lugar handgun).

The cases identified by the defendant, however, are distinguishable from the present case. In Maner and Llera, this court concluded that the trial court abused its discretion in admitting guns that were found in the respective defendants' possession because the guns were not the weapons used in the commission of the crime charged. In Acklin and Girolamo, the court determined that there was no evidence connecting the exhibits to the crimes charged. In the present case, forensic scientists were unable to determine the type of gun used in the shooting, but their testimony did not rule out the use of a small caliber gun in the commission of the crime. Additionally, in the present case, the state introduced evidence connecting the shell casings to the shooting death of the victim. The state introduced testimony that the shell casings came from a .22 caliber gun and Thompson's statement that he had seen the defendant with a .22 or .25 caliber gun. There was also testimony that the victim's wound was consistent with the type of wound created by a bullet fired from a small caliber gun.

Moreover, the casings are relevant to the crime charged because they show that the defendant had the means to commit the shooting. "Evidence indicating that an accused possessed an article with which the particular crime charged may have been accomplished is generally relevant to show that the accused had the means to commit the crime. The state does not have to connect a weapon directly to the defendant and the crime. It is necessary only that the weapon be suitable for the commission of the offense." (Emphasis omitted; citation omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.)

State v. Franklin, 162 Conn. App. 78, 96, 129 A.3d 770 (2015) (testimony about defendant confronting witness with gun three weeks before shooting relevant because it indicated defendant had means to commit crime), cert. denied, 321 Conn. 905, 138 A.3d 281 (2016); see State v. Gray-Brown, supra, 188 Conn. App. 461–62 (empty nine millimeter Remington ammunition tray found in defendant’s home was relevant to murder committed using nine millimeter bullets made by different manufacturer); State v. VanAllen, 140 Conn. App. 689, 696, 59 A.3d 888 (shell casings found at scene of shooting where defendant was present were relevant despite lack of evidence of type of gun used), cert. denied, 308 Conn. 921, 62 A.3d 1134 (2013); Langston v. Commissioner of Correction, 104 Conn. App. 210, 217–18, 931 A.2d 967 (silencer found in defendant’s home was relevant because it indicated defendant possessed gun), cert. denied, 284 Conn. 941, 937 A.2d 697 (2007).

Like the evidence in those cases, the shell casings in the present case indicate that the defendant had the means to commit the crime. The shooting was committed with a firearm, and there is evidence that the firearm used was a small caliber gun. Thus, the .22 caliber shell casings, which were found in the defendant’s home, have a tendency to prove that the defendant owned a firearm and, therefore, that he had the means to commit a crime involving a small caliber gun. See, e.g., Edward M. v. Commissioner of Correction, 186 Conn. App. 754, 762–63, 201 A.3d 492 (“The well settled standard for relevance of evidence is extremely low. . . . [W]hether to give such evidence no weight, little weight or much weight, is up to the jury.” [Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.]), cert. denied, 305 Conn. 914, 46 A.3d 172 (2012).

On the basis of the foregoing, we conclude that the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence the spent shell casings.

192 Conn. App. 68

AUGUST, 2019

95

State v. Moon

IV

The defendant's final claim is that the trial court's instruction on conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree was improper because it omitted the intent element required for the underlying crime of robbery in the first degree. The defendant argues that the court failed to instruct the jury that it had to find that he intended to commit a robbery while he or another participant was armed. We disagree.

The following additional facts and procedural history are relevant to this claim. After closing arguments, the court reviewed with counsel its proposed jury instructions, which it had provided to counsel two days earlier. When the court asked whether counsel approved of the instructions with regard to conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree, defense counsel stated that they were acceptable. After going over the instructions, the court asked whether there was anything else counsel would like to discuss. Both counsel responded, "no." The court then inquired: "Does counsel need any more time to review these jury instructions except for the final copy that I will give to you?" Counsel responded that they did not require any additional time.

Thereafter, the court instructed the jury. The instruction on conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree provided in relevant part: "The statute defining conspiracy reads in pertinent part as follows: A person is guilty of conspiracy when, with intent that conduct constituting a crime be performed, he agrees with one or more persons to engage in or cause the performance of such conduct, and any one of them commits an overt act in pursuance of such conspiracy. . . . The state must prove the following elements beyond a reasonable doubt: (1) the defendant intended to commit the crime of robbery in the first degree; (2) the defendant agreed with one or more persons to engage in or cause the performance of the crime of robbery in the first degree; [and] (3) the commission of an overt act in pursuance of the conspiracy, by any one or more of the persons who made the agreement.”

With regard to the intent element of conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree, the court further instructed: “The first element is that the defendant had the intent that conduct constituting [robbery in the first degree] be performed The defendant must be proven to have been [motivated] by criminal intent. The defendant may not be found guilty, unless the state has proven beyond a reasonable doubt that he had specific intent to violate the law, when he entered into an agreement to engage in the conduct constituting a crime. You are referred to the court’s previous instructions on intent, which are incorporated here with the same force and effect.”

On appeal, the defendant concedes that this claim was not raised at trial, but argues that it can be reviewed under State v. Golding, 213 Conn. 233, 239–40, 567 A.2d 823 (1989), as modified by In re Yasiel R., 317 Conn. 773, 781, 120 A.3d 1188 (2015). The state argues that the defendant is not entitled to Golding review because he waived his claim regarding the jury instructions on conspiracy. We agree with the state that the defendant waived this claim.

“[A] constitutional claim that has been waived does not satisfy the third prong of the Golding test because, in such circumstances, we simply cannot conclude that injustice [has been] done to either party . . . or that the alleged constitutional violation . . . exists and . . . deprived the defendant of a fair trial.” State v. Kitchens, 299 Conn. 447, 467, 482–83, 10 A.3d 942 (2011).

“[W]hen the trial court provides counsel with a copy of the proposed jury instructions, allows a meaningful opportunity for their review, solicits comments from

192 Conn. App. 68

AUGUST, 2019

97

State v. Moon

counsel regarding changes or modifications and counsel affirmatively accepts the instructions proposed or given, the defendant may be deemed to have knowledge of any potential flaws therein and to have waived implicitly the constitutional right to challenge the instructions on direct appeal. Such a determination by the reviewing court must be based on a close examination of the record and the particular facts and circumstances of each case. (Footnote omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Bellamy, 323 Conn. 400, 409, 147 A.3d 655 (2016).

In the present case, the court provided counsel with a meaningful opportunity to review the instructions when it gave the parties a copy of the proposed jury instructions two days prior to instructing the jury. Thereafter, the court solicited comments from counsel regarding the proposed jury instructions. At this point, defense counsel did not express any concerns regarding the instructions on conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree and stated that he did not need more time to review the proposed jury instructions. Moreover, defense counsel failed to object after the court instructed the jury on conspiracy. Thus, defense counsel had various opportunities to object to the instruction and failed to do so. Accordingly, we conclude that the defendant waived his instructional claim.

Alternatively, the defendant argues that his claim can be reviewed under the plain error doctrine. Although a Kitchens waiver does not preclude claims of plain error; see State v. McClain, 324 Conn. 802, 815, 155 A.3d 209 (2017); we disagree that the instruction was plain error.

We first note that plain error is a doctrine of reversibility, not reviewability. See State v. Jamison, 320 Conn. 589, 595–97, 134 A.3d 560 (2016). “It is well established that the plain error doctrine, codified at Practice Book § 60-5, is an extraordinary remedy used by appellate courts to rectify errors committed at trial that, although unpreserved [and nonconstitutional in nature], are of such monumental proportion that they threaten to erode our system of justice and work a serious and manifest injustice on the aggrieved party. . . . That is, it is a doctrine that this court invokes in order to rectify a trial court ruling that, although either not properly preserved or never raised at all in the trial court, nonetheless requires reversal of the trial court's judgment . . . for reasons of policy. . . . In addition, the plain error doctrine is reserved for truly extraordinary situations [in which] the existence of the error is so obvious that it affects the fairness and integrity of and public confidence in the judicial proceedings. . . . Plain error is a doctrine that should be invoked sparingly. . . . Implicit in this very demanding standard is the notion . . . that invocation of the plain error doctrine is reserved for occasions requiring the reversal of the judgment under review. . . .

“An appellate court addressing a claim of plain error first must determine if the error is indeed plain in the sense that it is patent [or] readily [discernible] on the face of a factually adequate record, [and] also . . . obvious in the sense of not debatable. . . . This determination clearly requires a review of the plain error claim presented in light of the record.

“Although a complete record and an obvious error are prerequisites for plain error review, they are not, of themselves, sufficient for its application. . . . [I]n addition to examining the patent nature of the error, the reviewing court must examine that error for the grievousness of its consequences in order to determine whether reversal under the plain error doctrine is appropriate. A party cannot prevail under plain error unless it has demonstrated that the failure to grant relief will result in manifest injustice. . . . In State v. Fagan, [280 Conn. 69, 87, 905 A.2d 1101 (2006), cert. denied, 549

192 Conn. App. 68

AUGUST, 2019

99

State v. Moon

U.S. 1269, 127 S. Ct. 1491, 167 L.Ed.2d 236 (2007)], [our Supreme Court] described the two-pronged nature of the plain error doctrine: [An appellant] cannot prevail under [the plain error doctrine] . . . unless he demonstrates that the claimed error is both so clear and so harmful that a failure to reverse the judgment would result in manifest injustice.” (Citation omitted; emphasis in original; footnote omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Jamison, supra, 595–97. The standard of review relevant to claims of instructional error is set forth in part I of this opinion.

The defendant argues that the court committed plain error when it instructed the jury on conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree because it failed to instruct the jury on the requisite intent. Contrary to this argument, the record reveals that the court instructed on the intent requirement for conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree when it read from the conspiracy statute and set forth the elements of the crime. Indeed, the court provided the jury detailed instructions on the intent element of conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree, which made clear that the intent required for the charge was the intent to commit the underlying crime of robbery in the first degree and referenced the immediately preceding five page charge on robbery in the first degree.

The defendant relies on our Supreme Court’s decision in State v. Pond, 315 Conn. 451, 453, 108 A.3d 1083 (2015), in support of its argument that the court committed plain error by failing to adequately instruct on the intent requirement for conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree. In Pond, the defendant appealed his conviction of conspiracy to commit robbery in the second degree in violation of General Statutes (Rev. to 2007) §§ 53a-135 (a) (2) and 53a-48 (a), claiming that the trial court improperly failed to instruct the jury that, to find the defendant guilty of the conspiracy charge, it must find that he specifically had intended that the planned robbery would involve the display or threatened use of what the defendant's coconspirator represented to be a deadly weapon or dangerous instrument. The instruction with which the defendant took issue began with a recitation of the conspiracy statute and then provided: "The third element is that the defendant has the intent to commit robbery in the second degree. The intent for that crime is that at the time of the agreement he intended to commit larceny." (Emphasis added.) State v. Pond, supra, 456.

Pond is distinguishable from the present case. In Pond, the trial court improperly instructed the jury that the requisite intent for conspiracy to commit robbery in the second degree was intent to commit larceny, a crime that does not require that the defendant intended that a participant be armed. By contrast, in the present case, the court made clear that the defendant had to intend for a participant in the crime to use a deadly weapon when it stated that the intent required for conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree is the intent to agree to commit the underlying crime of robbery in the first degree. Moreover, the court's instructions on robbery in the first degree, which it incorporated by reference into its instruction on conspiracy, provided that a participant in the crime had to be armed with a deadly weapon in order to find the defendant guilty of robbery in the first degree. The court's instruction on robbery in the first degree provided: "The second element of robbery in the first degree is that in the course of the commission of the crime of robbery, or immediate flight therefrom, the defendant, or another participant of the crime is armed with a deadly weapon." The court also instructed: "To be armed with a deadly weapon means to be knowingly engaged with, or knowingly carrying such an item." (Emphasis added; internal quotation marks omitted.) With regard to the term knowingly, the court provided:

192 Conn. App. 101

AUGUST, 2019

101

Wilson v. Di Iulio

“An act is done knowingly if done voluntarily and purposely, and not because of mistake, inadvertence or accident. . . . The inference may be drawn if the circumstances are such that a reasonable person of honest intention, in the situation of the defendant, would have concluded that he, or another participant, was armed with a deadly weapon.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Because the court’s instruction informed the jury that it needed to find that the defendant intended that a participant in the crime be armed with a deadly weapon, we are unpersuaded that the court erred when it instructed the jury on conspiracy to commit robbery in the first degree, let alone that its instruction constituted plain error such that it would cause the public to lose faith in the judicial system or result in manifest injustice.

The judgment is affirmed.

In this opinion the other judges concurred.

HEATHER WILSON v. MICHAEL Di IULIO
(AC 41240)

DiPentima, C. J., and Bright and Moll, Js.

Syllabus

The defendant appealed to this court from the judgment of the trial court dissolving his marriage to the plaintiff and issuing certain financial orders. The defendant claimed that the trial court improperly failed to award him more than nominal alimony despite the substantial disparity in the parties’ incomes and ability to pay expenses, and abused its discretion by making a property award enforceable by a modifiable alimony award. Held:

1. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in failing to award more than nominal alimony to the defendant; that court created an effectively equal division of the parties’ marital assets by ordering the plaintiff to discharge the mortgage on the marital property, in which the defendant continues to reside, and to convey funds from her retirement plan to the defendant.
2. The defendant could not prevail on his claim that the trial court erred in its property division by making a property award enforceable by a modifiable alimony award; the court, which entered orders designating the defendant as the alternate payee pursuant to a domestic relations order but recognized that a decision by the plaintiff to remarry could divest the defendant of that award because a new spouse would have to consent to the designation of the defendant as the survivor beneficiary under the terms of the plaintiff's retirement plan, acted within its discretion in fashioning the award, as it considered the restrictions in the plaintiff's retirement plan and, to account for them, ordered nominal alimony of $1 per year to the defendant as security for the award, and the court did not retain jurisdiction to modify the property award in the future but, rather, issued an award of nominal alimony for the protection of the defendant, which was not an abuse of discretion.

Wilson v. Di Iulio

Argued March 11—officially released August 27, 2019

Procedural History

Action for the dissolution of a marriage, and for other relief, brought to the Superior Court in the judicial district of Hartford and tried to the court, Olear, J.; judgment dissolving marriage and granting certain other relief; thereafter, the court denied the defendant's motion for an articulation, and the defendant appealed to this court. Affirmed.

John F. Morris, for the appellant (defendant).

Steven R. Dembo, with whom were Caitlin E. Kozloski and, on the brief, P. Jo Anne Burgh, for the appellee (plaintiff).

Opinion

MOLL, J. The defendant, Michael Di Iulio, appeals from the judgment of the trial court dissolving his marriage to the plaintiff, Heather Wilson, and entering related financial orders. On appeal, the defendant claims that the court erred by (1) failing to award him more than nominal alimony despite the substantial disparity in the parties' incomes and ability to afford expenses and (2) making a property award enforceable by a modifiable alimony award. We disagree with the defendant and, accordingly, affirm the judgment of the trial court.

192 Conn. App. 101

AUGUST, 2019

103

Wilson v. Di Iulio

The following facts, as set forth in the court's memorandum of decision,¹ and procedural history are relevant to our discussion. The parties began dating in 1991, when they both were employed by the Office of the Attorney General. The plaintiff was, and continues to work as, an assistant attorney general; the defendant worked as an accountant until 2002 or 2003, when he retired. The parties were married on October 6, 1999. By complaint dated June 7, 2016, the plaintiff commenced the present action seeking dissolution of the parties' marriage.

The parties have two children, a daughter born in 2000, and a son born in 2004. The parties agreed to share joint legal custody of the children and, during trial, asked the court to incorporate their parenting plan into the court's decision. The parties' daughter resided with the plaintiff, and the parties' son shared time with both parents by staying with each parent alternating weeks. The parties agreed that the children have attended and may continue to attend private schools and that the parties would pay these expenses from the assets that they had accumulated for the children. The parties also agreed, and the court ordered, that the children's postsecondary education expenses would be paid from the funds in certain specified accounts and that the plaintiff would pay any costs remaining after the application of such funds.

At the time of trial, the plaintiff was fifty-seven years old and generally was healthy. She has a bachelor's degree, as well as a juris doctor and has worked at the Office of the Attorney General since 1986.² The plaintiff's biweekly salary was $5968 and her net weekly income after mandatory deductions was $1991. The plaintiff is fully vested in the Connecticut state employee retirement system. The court found that until recently, the plaintiff had withheld funds from her biweekly paycheck for investment in her 457 retirement plan. The plaintiff also has premarital assets and assets inherited from her mother.

¹ The court's memorandum of decision also addressed a motion for contempt filed by the defendant. This part of the court's ruling is not at issue in the present appeal.

² The court found that the plaintiff had worked at the Office of the Attorney General since 1988. The plaintiff testified, however, that she met the defendant in 1988 when they both were employed at the Office of the Attorney General but that she had started working in that office in September, 1986.

At the time of trial, the defendant was seventy years old. He has a bachelor's degree and retired from the Office of the Attorney General in 2002 or 2003. Prior to his employment with the Office of the Attorney General, the defendant worked for various entities doing accounting and cost analysis. The court found that the defendant was not advancing in his position with the Office of the Attorney General and was working for a difficult supervisor. The parties mutually decided that the defendant would retire, enabling him to provide care to the parties' young children and allowing the plaintiff to continue working.

The defendant took an early retirement package and elected, irrevocably, the 50 percent option form of reduced retirement income for the plaintiff's benefit.³ The defendant's current pension payment is $393 per week, and he receives social security income in the amount of $249 per week. The court found the defendant's net income to be $842 per week, based on a gross income of $982 per week.⁴ The court declined the plaintiff's request to impute $27,105 in annual retirement income withdrawals to the defendant from his retirement investment accounts; the court stated, however, that it had considered the availability of funds in ³ By making that election, the defendant's base allowance of $16,640.10, which would have been payable monthly in the amount of $1,386.68, was reduced to $14,109.14, payable monthly in the amount of $1,175.76. The plaintiff's retained benefit is $588 per month.

⁴ In arriving at these figures, the court also included, in the defendant's income, a $340 per week social security dependency benefit paid to the parties' children.

192 Conn. App. 101

AUGUST, 2019

105

Wilson v. Di Iulio

the defendant's accounts in structuring its orders. The court found that the defendant had premarital assets and assets inherited from his family and that he had contributed to a deferred compensation plan when he was employed. Finally, the court found that, upon retirement and against the plaintiff's wishes, the defendant rolled over the funds from his state managed retirement fund into a Charles Schwab account that he could manage.

Prior to the marriage, the plaintiff owned a home in Meriden, and the defendant owned a home in Winsted. In 1995, the plaintiff moved into the Winsted home and thereafter sold her home in Meriden. The parties refinanced the mortgage on the Winsted property using a portion of the proceeds of the sale of the Meriden home and thereafter owned the Winsted property as joint tenants. In January, 2011, the parties purchased the marital residence located in New Hartford. They did not move into that home until November, 2011, as they wanted to make some improvements to the home prior to moving in. In October, 2012, the parties sold the Winsted home.

In March, 2016, the plaintiff informed the defendant that she was moving out. In May, 2016, the plaintiff purchased a home in Unionville, where she continues to reside. The plaintiff valued the Unionville home at $280,000. The court found that the majority of funds utilized to acquire this home were premarital and/or inherited funds, that this home was subject to a mortgage of $45,000, and that the plaintiff had $235,000 of equity therein. The defendant continues to reside in the New Hartford home. According to the financial affidavits of both parties, the mortgage on the New Hartford property had a principal balance of $162,000. The court found that the fair market value of the home was $350,000 and that the parties had $188,000 in equity in the home.

In its memorandum of decision dissolving the parties' marriage, the court did not attribute significantly greater fault for the breakdown of the marriage to either party. It ordered the plaintiff to make the monthly payments on the New Hartford mortgage from and after the date of the judgment and to discharge the mortgage encumbering the property within six months from the date of the judgment. The court further ordered that the plaintiff convey to the defendant the sum of $126,000 from her 457 retirement account. With regard to the plaintiff's pension, the court noted that, pursuant to the plaintiff's Connecticut state employee retirement plan, the plaintiff could not elect a survivor beneficiary of her retirement benefits until she retired and that, if the plaintiff is remarried when she retires, the new spouse would have to consent to the designation of the defendant as the survivor beneficiary. The court entered orders designating the defendant as the alternate payee pursuant to a domestic relations order.⁵ The court further ordered that no alimony was payable by one party to the other except as set forth in section G.4 of the dissolution judgment, which governed the distribution of the parties' respective retirement accounts. Pursuant to section G.4 (v) of the dissolution judgment, the defendant was awarded $1 per year in alimony "modifiable only to enforce the rights called for in this provision."

⁵ Specifically, the court ordered that "the defendant as the alternate payee shall receive, by a [domestic relations order], and the plaintiff is directed to pay benefits to the alternate payee as a marital property settlement under the following formula: fifty (50) percent of the gross monthly benefit payable at the date of distribution to the plaintiff (member) multiplied by the 'service factor.' The numerator of the service factor is the number of years accumulated during the marriage period and the denominator is the member's total years of service covered by the plan and used in calculating the member's benefit. The amount payable to the defendant shall include a proportionate share of any cost-of-living adjustments (COLAs) payable to the plaintiff.

"This award of 50 percent of the gross monthly benefit payable at the date of distribution to the plaintiff (member) multiplied by the 'service factor' entitles the defendant to rights of joint survivor benefits, which are herewith ordered as his, and the plaintiff is ordered to so continue that designation to his benefit. The plaintiff's retained right of designation of the alternate payee is limited by this order."

Following the denials of the defendant's postjudgment motion for articulation and motion to reargue, the defendant filed the present appeal.⁶

I

The defendant first claims that the court erred by failing to award him more than nominal alimony despite the substantial disparity in the parties' incomes and ability to pay expenses.⁷ He contends that the plaintiff's financial affidavit reveals a surplus of income over expenses while the defendant's affidavit reveals a shortfall.⁸ Specifically, the defendant points out that the

⁶ The defendant also filed a motion for articulation after filing this appeal, asking the trial court to articulate the factual and legal basis for several of its financial orders. The trial court declined to articulate as requested. The defendant did not file a motion for review of that articulation with this court. See Practice Book § 66-7.

⁷ In support of his argument, the defendant contends, in part, that none of the usual reasons used to justify time limited alimony applies. See Kovalsick v. Kovalsick, 125 Conn. App. 265, 273-75, 7 A.3d 924 (2010); de Repentigny v. de Repentigny, 121 Conn. App. 451, 460-61, 995 A.2d 117 (2010). We note, however, that the defendant did not request, and the court did not order, time limited alimony.

⁸ As part of this argument, the defendant claims that this shortfall can only increase, as he has been left solely responsible for the private school expenses of the parties' son. Specifically, the defendant contends that although the parties agreed that their children would continue to attend private schools and that they had agreed to fund such costs from the assets they had accumulated for the children, the court never entered this agreement as an order. The only order in the court's decision concerning education expenses pertained to postmajority education, in which the court ordered the plaintiff to assume and pay for all college costs remaining after application of certain specified accounts.

We note, however, that the defendant did not submit a proposed order with regard to the payment of private school tuition. Further, when the plaintiff attempted to question the defendant during cross-examination about the private school tuition, the defendant objected on the ground that the question went beyond the scope of direct examination. Finally, although the defendant filed a motion asking the trial court to articulate the factual and legal basis for several of its orders, the motion did not reference the payment of private school tuition.

"As the appellant, the defendant has the burden of providing this court with a record from which this court can review any alleged claims of error. . . . It is not an appropriate function of this court, when presented with an inadequate record, to speculate as to the reasoning of the trial court or to presume error from a silent record." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) United Amusements & Vending Co. v. Sabia, 179 Conn. App. 555, 561, 180 A.3d 630 (2018). In the present case, in addition to failing to submit a plaintiff's net income, as reflected on her financial affidavit, was $1966 per week and her expenses were $1178 per week, while he had a weekly income of $642 and weekly expenses of $1270. In addition to the disparity in the parties' incomes, the defendant notes that he has been retired for fifteen years and is seventy years of age. He points out that he retired by agreement of the parties, enabling him to care for the parties' children and allowing the plaintiff to focus on her career. Finally, the defendant notes that the court did not attribute any fault to either party in its decision. The plaintiff counters that the court did not abuse its discretion in declining to award additional alimony to the defendant. We agree with the plaintiff.

We first set forth the standard of review applicable to the defendant's claim on appeal. "We review financial awards in dissolution actions under an abuse of discretion standard. . . . In order to conclude that the trial court abused its discretion, we must find that the court either incorrectly applied the law or could not reasonably conclude as it did. . . . In determining whether a trial court has abused its broad discretion in domestic relations matters, we allow every reasonable presumption in favor of the correctness of its action." (Citation omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Horey v. Horey, 172 Conn. App. 735, 740, 161 A.3d 579 (2017). "That standard of review reflects the sound policy that the trial court has the unique opportunity to view the parties and their testimony, and is therefore in the best position to assess all of the circumstances surrounding a dissolution action, including such factors as the demeanor and attitude of the parties." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Mensah v. Mensah, 167 Conn. App.

proposed order regarding private school tuition, the defendant objected to questioning on this issue and failed to include, in his motion for articulation, a request that the court address this issue. Because we are left to speculate with regard to the defendant's claim of increased educational expenses for the parties' son, we decline to review this claim.

192 Conn. App. 101 AUGUST, 2019 109

Wilson v. Di Iulio

219, 228, 143 A.3d 622, cert. denied, 323 Conn. 923, 150 A.3d 1151 (2016).

“General Statutes § 46b-82 governs awards of alimony. That section requires the trial court to consider the length of the marriage, the causes for the annulment, dissolution of the marriage or legal separation, the age, health, station, occupation, amount and sources of income, earning capacity, vocational skills, education, employability, estate and needs of each of the parties and the award, if any, which the court may make pursuant to section 46b-81 In awarding alimony, [t]he court must consider all of these criteria. . . . It need not, however, make explicit reference to the statutory criteria that it considered in making its decision or make express findings as to each statutory factor. . . . The trial court may place varying degrees of importance on each criterion according to the factual circumstances of each case.” (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Emerick v. Emerick, 170 Conn. App. 368, 379–80, 154 A.3d 1069, cert. denied, 327 Conn. 922, 171 A.3d 60 (2017). “There is no absolute right to alimony.” Weinstein v. Weinstein, 18 Conn. App. 622, 637, 561 A.2d 443 (1989).

At trial, the defendant testified that he received his bachelor’s degree in accounting from Central Connecticut State University in 1976. Upon graduation, the defendant worked as a cost analyst, first at Waring Products in New Hartford and later at Ensign Bickford in Simsbury. He then worked as a plant accountant for UNC Naval Products in New London for six years before going to the Attorney General’s Office, where he worked as an accountant for approximately fifteen years before retiring in 2002 or 2003. Once the defendant retired, he took over household and childcare responsibilities and never again obtained full- or part-time employment in the accounting field.

The defendant testified that his current annual income, consisting of his pension and social security, is approximately $32,000 and that he uses his pension payments to pay the mortgage on the property in New Hartford. In his amended proposed orders,⁹ the defendant proposed that the plaintiff be ordered to pay him $650 per week, or approximately $34,000 annually, in permanent alimony. He testified that he based his request for alimony on the cost of running the household. He further testified that it was his position that the plaintiff should pay this expense in its entirety and that the court should order that this award be permanent and nonmodifiable, even if the plaintiff retired or became disabled or ill.¹⁰

The plaintiff testified that she received her law degree from Boston College Law School and has been ⁹ Although the caption of this document is “Plaintiff’s Amended Proposed Orders,” the document was filed by counsel for the defendant.

¹⁰ The defendant also testified that he should receive 50 percent of the plaintiff’s pension at the time of the final dissolution, even though it was not in pay status, and speculated that the plaintiff would be able to comply with the court’s order from her current assets. The defendant testified as follows on cross-examination:

“[The Plaintiff’s Counsel]: Now if the court orders the amount of money you’re requesting, and to be clear . . . you are requesting that the court order a transfer to you from [the plaintiff] of $883,690 on the day of the divorce.

“[The Defendant]: Okay, yes.

“[The Plaintiff’s Counsel]: Do you have an understanding of, from what assets [the plaintiff] would be able to meet such an order?”

“[The Defendant]: Mm-hmm.

“[The Court]: You have to say yes or no.

* * *

“[The Plaintiff’s Counsel]: Okay, how would you—how do you see her doing that?”

“[The Defendant]: Well, she could take out a loan on her house.

“[The Plaintiff’s Counsel]: Mm-hmm.

“[The Defendant]: She has substantial savings.

“[The Plaintiff’s Counsel]: Mm-hmm.

“[The Defendant]: My understanding [is] she has over a million dollars in assets, financial assets.”

192 Conn. App. 101

AUGUST, 2019

111

Wilson v. Di Iulio

employed at the Attorney General's Office since 1986. She started as an assistant attorney general 1 and is now an assistant attorney general 4, which is the highest civil service level in the Attorney General's Office. The plaintiff's financial affidavit reflected a gross weekly income of $2996, although she conceded at trial that the income as shown on a pay stub admitted into evidence reflected a gross weekly income of $3357. The plaintiff proposed using approximately $139,000 of her solely held assets to pay off the mortgage on the New Hartford property where the defendant lived with the parties' son. She testified that she wanted to have the defendant "in a more comfortable financial position by not having a mortgage to be concerned about." She also thought it was important that the parties' son continue to reside in that house because he had friends in the neighborhood. According to the plaintiff, the monthly mortgage payment on the house was approximately $1900 per month in principal and interest, and she indicated that she would consider the $139,000 payoff of the mortgage "as essentially sort of being in place of alimony in a lump sum, that will reduce his need for alimony because it will you know bring his expenses down significantly."

In its decision, other than the nominal alimony award set forth in section G.4 (v) of the dissolution judgment, the court declined to award alimony to either party and ordered, inter alia, that the plaintiff discharge the mortgage on the New Hartford property within six months from the date of judgment. The court stated that, after considering General Statutes §§ 46b-81 and 46b-82, it had "fashioned the additional property settlement by the plaintiff to the defendant in lieu of the payment of periodic alimony and further to allow the plaintiff to be removed from liability from the mortgage presently encumbering the marital residence." The court further awarded each party the assets they respectively held and ordered that the plaintiff convey to the

112

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 101

Wilson v. Di Iulio

defendant the sum of $126,000 from her 457 retirement plan with the state. In his brief, the defendant concedes that these transfers “created an effectively equal division of the parties’ marital assets.”

The trial court stated that its decision not to award alimony beyond the nominal alimony set forth in section G.4 (v) of the dissolution judgment was “based on the statutory factors, including the age, education, earnings, cause of the breakdown, the estate and needs of the parties, and the division of assets” Although the court did not attribute significantly greater fault for the marital breakdown to either party, it indicated that the defendant’s testimony was often sarcastic and frequently not credible and that, despite being an accountant, he claimed not to understand the proposed orders and certain questions related to financial and/or retirement matters. The court indicated that it found the plaintiff’s testimony to be more credible. See Mensah v. Mensah, supra, 167 Conn. App. 228 (trial court in best position to assess circumstances surrounding dissolution action, including demeanor and attitude of parties). The defendant acknowledges that the court created an effectively equal division of the parties’ marital assets by ordering the plaintiff to discharge the mortgage on the New Hartford property and to convey $126,000 from her 457 retirement plan to him. On the basis of our review of the record, and in light of these orders, we cannot conclude that the court abused its discretion in declining to award the defendant more than nominal alimony. Accordingly, the defendant’s claim fails.

II

The defendant next argues that the court erred in its property division by making a property award enforceable by a modifiable alimony award. We disagree.

As previously stated, “[w]e review financial awards in dissolution actions under an abuse of discretion standard. . . . In order to conclude that the trial court

192 Conn. App. 101

AUGUST, 2019

113

Wilson v. Di Iulio

abused its discretion, we must find that the court either incorrectly applied the law or could not reasonably conclude as it did. . . . In determining whether a trial court has abused its broad discretion in domestic relations matters, we allow every reasonable presumption in favor of the correctness of its action.” (Citation omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Horey v. Horey, supra, 172 Conn. App. 740.

The court entered orders designating the defendant as the alternate payee pursuant to a domestic relations order. See footnote 5 of this opinion. Recognizing that a decision by the plaintiff to remarry could divest the defendant of this award, because the new spouse would have to consent to the designation of the defendant as the survivor beneficiary, the court ordered $1 per year in alimony to the defendant “modifiable only to enforce the rights called for in this provision.” According to the defendant, this solution conflates the nonmodifiable nature of a property division with the modifiable nature of an alimony award.

The plaintiff agrees that a property award pursuant to § 46b-81 cannot be modified after judgment. She argues, however, that there is nothing in the court’s decision that seeks, orders, or retains jurisdiction to modify a property settlement in the future. The plaintiff argues, rather, that the court was within its discretion to award alimony of $1 per year as security in favor of the defendant given the terms of the plaintiff’s retirement plan. We agree with the plaintiff.

In Utz v. Utz, 112 Conn. App. 631, 963 A.2d 1049, cert. denied, 291 Conn. 908, 969 A.2d 173 (2009), this court considered an order similar to the order at issue in the present case. In Utz, the trial court ordered the defendant to pay the plaintiff, inter alia, $1 per year in alimony “until such time as the property settlement [entered by the court was] paid in full and the liens

114

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 101

Wilson v. Di Iulio

and encumbrances on the [marital home], which the defendant is obligated to indemnify on account of [the property settlement was] paid in full and, or, released, or he exercises his option to purchase the residence and acreage.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 633 n.1. The trial court further stated that the order of $1 per year in alimony would be “modifiable to the extent necessary to ensure that the defendant satisfies all of his obligations under the property settlement, periodic alimony and lump sum alimony orders.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id. On appeal, the defendant argued that the court’s order of $1 per year in nominal alimony was evidence of the court’s knowledge that he would be unable to comply with the court’s order. Id., 634–35. This court rejected the defendant’s claim, concluding that the court acted within its discretion in entering the order. Id., 636.

As in Utz, we conclude that the court in the present case acted within its discretion in fashioning the award as it did. The court considered the restrictions in the plaintiff’s retirement plan, which require that a future spouse of the plaintiff consent to the designation of the defendant as a survivor beneficiary. To account for this scenario, the court ordered nominal alimony of $1 per year to the defendant as security for the award.¹¹ The court did not retain jurisdiction to modify the property award in the future but, rather, issued an award of nominal alimony for the protection of the defendant. On the basis of our review of the record, we cannot conclude that the court abused its discretion in entering this order.

The judgment is affirmed.

In this opinion the other judges concurred.

¹¹ “Nominal alimony, commonly $1 per year, is typical when the court chooses to preserve for a future date the power to ascertain and to determine the appropriate amount of periodic alimony.” Utz v. Utz, supra, 112 Conn. App. 633 n.1.

192 Conn. App. 115

AUGUST, 2019

115

State v. Rodriguez

STATE OF CONNECTICUT v.
JOSE LUIS RODRIGUEZ
(AC 40837)

Lavine, Moll and Bishop, Js.

Syllabus

Convicted of the crimes of public indecency, breach of the peace, improper use of a marker, registration or license, and illegal operation of a motor vehicle while his driver's license was under suspension, and of two counts of the crime of failure to appear in the second degree, the defendant appealed to this court. The defendant's conviction stemmed from an incident in which he allegedly exposed his penis and appeared to be masturbating while at a diner. On appeal, he claimed, inter alia, that the trial court improperly admitted certain evidence of uncharged prior misconduct, which pertained to incidents in which he was arrested but not charged for exposing himself to a waitress at either a diner or restaurant. Held:

1. The defendant's claim that the trial court improperly admitted evidence of prior uncharged misconduct was not reviewable, the defendant having failed to preserve the claim by objecting to the court's admission of the uncharged misconduct evidence, and the court did not commit plain error by admitting the uncharged misconduct evidence, as the alleged error was not so obvious that it affected the fairness and integrity of and public confidence in the judicial proceedings.
2. The defendant's claim that he was entitled to plain error reversal because the trial court improperly instructed the jury on the uncharged misconduct evidence was unavailing; the defendant failed to file a request to charge or to object to the court's proposed instructions, and the jury instructions pertaining to the uncharged misconduct evidence did not rise to the level of egregiousness and harm that would warrant reversal under the plain error doctrine, as the uncharged misconduct evidence had been admitted without objection from the defendant and, thus, the court was required to instruct the jury as to how to consider that evidence, and the defendant failed to articulate in what precise respect the jury instructions at issue were flawed and caused harm.
3. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the defendant's motion to sever the failure to appear counts from the other counts in the information; although the conduct for which the defendant was convicted could be perceived as deeply offensive, the crimes involved did not rise to the level of shocking so as to warrant severance, and even if the public indecency and breach of the peace charges shocked or aroused the passions of the jurors, any prejudice that might have resulted was ameliorated by the trial court's curative instructions, and the evidence was overwhelming as to all charges against the defendant.

Argued March 14—officially released August 27, 2019

116 AUGUST, 2019 192 Conn. App. 115

State v. Rodriguez

Procedural History

Substitute information charging the defendant with the crimes of public indecency, breach of the peace, improper use of a marker, registration or license, and illegal operation of a motor vehicle while his driver's license was under suspension, and with two counts of failure to appear in the second degree, brought to the Superior Court in the judicial district of Danbury, geographical area number three, where the court, Russo, J., denied the defendant's motion to sever the failure to appear charges; thereafter the matter was tried to a jury; verdict and judgment of guilty, from which the defendant appealed to this court. Affirmed.

Conrad Ost Seifert, assigned counsel, for the appellant (defendant).

Jennifer F. Miller, assistant state's attorney, with whom, on the brief, were Stephen J. Sedensky III, state's attorney, and Deborah Mabbett, senior assistant state's attorney, for the appellee (state).

Opinion

LAVINE, J. The defendant, Jose Luis Rodriguez, appeals from the judgment of conviction, rendered following a jury trial, of public indecency in violation of General Statutes § 53a-186 (a) (2), breach of the peace in the second degree in violation of General Statutes § 53a-181 (a) (5), improper use of a marker, registration, or license in violation of General Statutes § 14-147 (c), illegal operation of a motor vehicle while his driver's license was under suspension in violation of General Statutes § 14-215 (a), and two counts of failure to appear in the second degree in violation of General Statutes § 53a-173 (a) (1). The defendant claims on appeal that the court improperly (1) admitted evidence of uncharged misconduct, (2) instructed the jury on the uncharged misconduct evidence, and (3) denied his motion to sever the public indecency, breach of the

192 Conn. App. 115

AUGUST, 2019

117

State v. Rodriguez

peace, and motor vehicle charges from the failure to appear charges. We affirm the judgment of the trial court.

The jury reasonably could have found the following facts beyond a reasonable doubt. At 2 a.m. on September 14, 2006, a waitress at Blue Colony Diner (diner) in Newtown called the police because the defendant had exposed his penis and appeared to be masturbating. When police officers arrived at the diner, the waitress directed them to the table where the defendant was seated. Although the defendant told police that someone named “Steve” dropped him off at the diner, the police found a set of keys on his person that matched an Oldsmobile in the diner parking lot. The police ran the license plate on the Oldsmobile through their database system and discovered that it belonged to a different vehicle and was registered to another individual. The police also learned that the operator’s license of the defendant had been suspended indefinitely.

The defendant was charged with public indecency, breach of the peace in the second degree, and motor vehicle violations. He failed to appear on May 2, 2007, and July 17, 2009, and was arrested and charged for both failures.

The public indecency, breach of the peace, and motor vehicle charges were consolidated with the failure to appear charges for trial. The defendant filed a motion to sever the failure to appear charges from the other charges; the motion was heard and denied by the court. Trial commenced on June 6, 2017. The defendant was convicted of all charges and sentenced to a total effective sentence of two years of imprisonment, execution suspended after one year and two days, and three years of probation. The defendant then appealed from the judgment of conviction.

I

The defendant first claims that the court improperly admitted evidence of three instances in which he was arrested but not charged for exposing himself to a waitress at either a diner or restaurant. The state argues that the defendant did not preserve this evidentiary claim. We agree with the state. Alternatively, the defendant claims that he is entitled to plain error reversal. We disagree.

At trial, the state offered evidence of the defendant's uncharged misconduct pursuant to § 4-5 (c) of the Connecticut Code of Evidence and argued that it was admissible to prove his intent to expose himself for sexual gratification, the lack of mistake or accident, motive, and a common plan or scheme involving a pattern of sexual behavior. The state also offered the uncharged misconduct under § 4-5 (b) of the Connecticut Code of Evidence to show propensity for sexual misconduct. The defendant's counsel did not object; in response to the state's proffer of uncharged misconduct evidence, he stated: "I would have to leave it to the court's discretion, in that regard"

"[T]he standard for the preservation of a claim alleging an improper evidentiary ruling at trial is well settled. This court is not bound to consider claims of law not made at the trial. . . . In order to preserve an evidentiary ruling for review, trial counsel must object properly. . . . In objecting to evidence, counsel must properly articulate the basis of the objection so as to apprise the trial court of the precise nature of the objection and its real purpose, in order to form an adequate basis for a reviewable ruling. . . . Once counsel states the authority and ground of [the] objection, any appeal will be limited to the ground asserted. . . ."

"These requirements are not simply formalities. They serve to alert the trial court to potential error while there is still time for the court to act. . . . Assigning

192 Conn. App. 115

AUGUST, 2019

119

State v. Rodriguez

error to a court’s evidentiary rulings on the basis of objections never raised at trial unfairly subjects the court and the opposing party to trial by ambush. . . . [A] party cannot present a case to the trial court on one theory and then seek appellate relief on a different one For this court to . . . consider [a] claim on the basis of a specific legal ground not raised during trial would amount to trial by ambush, unfair both to the [court] and to the opposing party. . . . Thus, because the sine qua non of preservation is fair notice to the trial court; see, e.g., State v. Ross, 269 Conn. 213, 335–36, 849 A.2d 648 (2004) (the essence of the preservation requirement is that fair notice be given to the trial court of the party’s view of the governing law [emphasis in original]); the determination of whether a claim has been properly preserved will depend on a careful review of the record to ascertain whether the claim on appeal was articulated below with sufficient clarity to place the trial court on reasonable notice of that very same claim.” (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Jorge P., 308 Conn. 740, 753–54, 66 A.3d 869 (2013).

The defendant argues on appeal that his counsel “somewhat ambiguously objected and, inter alia, stated that ‘propensity evidence is, extremely, potent evidence.’” Leaving an evidentiary ruling to the court’s judgment falls well short of making an objection. So does an observation about the potency of evidence. On the basis of our review of the record, we conclude the defendant did not object to the court’s admission of the uncharged misconduct evidence at all, and certainly not with sufficient clarity so as to provide fair notice to the trial court. We therefore decline to review the defendant’s claim.

The defendant further argues that even if his claim is unpreserved, he is entitled to plain error reversal on the ground that the uncharged misconduct evidence

120

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 115

State v. Rodriguez

was not otherwise admissible and the prejudicial impact of the evidence outweighed its probative value. We disagree.

“[The plain error] doctrine, codified at Practice Book § 60-5, is an extraordinary remedy used by appellate courts to rectify errors committed at trial that, although unpreserved, are of such monumental proportion that they threaten to erode our system of justice and work a serious and manifest injustice on the aggrieved party. [T]he plain error doctrine . . . is not . . . a rule of reviewability. It is a rule of reversibility. That is, it is a doctrine that this court invokes in order to rectify a trial court ruling that, although either not properly preserved or never raised at all in the trial court, nonetheless requires reversal of the trial court’s judgment, for reasons of policy. . . . In addition, the plain error doctrine is reserved for truly extraordinary situations [in which] the existence of the error is so obvious that it affects the fairness and integrity of and public confidence in the judicial proceedings. . . . Plain error is a doctrine that should be invoked sparingly. . . . Implicit in this very demanding standard is the notion . . . that invocation of the plain error doctrine is reserved for occasions requiring the reversal of the judgment under review.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Sanchez, 308 Conn. 64, 76–77, 60 A.3d 271 (2013).

The trial court’s admission of the uncharged misconduct evidence in this case does not warrant relief under the plain error doctrine because the alleged error is not so obvious that it affects the fairness and integrity of and public confidence in the judicial proceedings. On the record, the court explained to counsel why it concluded that the uncharged misconduct evidence was admissible¹ and also addressed any possible prejudice by instructing the jury regarding the manner in which specifically, has reviewed the proffer attached to it of three separate incidences, one on May 21, 2006, one on March 9, 2005, and a third on June 17, 2009.

¹ On June 6, 2017, the court explained to counsel: “The court has reviewed the state’s notice of intent to offer evidence of uncharged misconduct and,

State v. Rodriguez

“And . . . the court, after reviewing those documents, arrives at the following ruling, with respect to the state’s notice of intent to offer evidence of uncharged misconduct:

“The fact that such evidence tends to prove the commission of other crimes by an accused does not render it inadmissible, if it is otherwise relevant and material. That’s from [State v. Figueroa, 235 Conn. 145, 665 A.2d 63 (1995)].

“Such evidence is admissible for other purposes such as to show intent, an element in the crime, identity, malice, motive or a system of criminal activity.

“Whether evidence of the uncharged misconduct is admissible is two-pronged.

“First, the evidence must be relevant and material to, at least, one of the circumstances encompassed by the exceptions to the rule.

“Second, the probative value of such evidence must outweigh the prejudice or affect of the other crimes evidence, and that’s at [State v. Figueroa, supra, 235 Conn. 162].

“A review of [State v. DeJesus, 288 Conn. 418, 953 A.2d 45 (2008)] assists the court, with respect to the relevancy standard for this type of misconduct.

“[State v. DeJesus] holds as follows:

“Relevancy is established by satisfying the liberal standard, pursuant to which evidence previously was admitted under the common scheme or plan exception.

“Accordingly, evidence of uncharged misconduct is relevant to prove that the defendant had a propensity or a tendency to engage in the crime charged, only if it is one, not too remote in time; two, similar to the offense charged; and three, committed upon persons similar to the prosecuting witness.

“Under the first prong of the court’s analysis the evidence of the three other public indecency incidences are relevant to the identity of the person who allegedly performed the public indecency incident, in connection with this trial, as well as the common plan or scheme.

“The first threshold for the use of evidence of other crimes or misconduct, on the issue of identity, is that the methods used are sufficiently unique to more—a reasonable inference that the person who performed one misdeed also did the other, so as to be the handiwork of the accused.

“A comparison of the three crimes sought to be introduced discloses the following similarities to the present crime: one, all three offenses, including this one, which would make it four, occurred at nighttime or early morning hours; in each instan[ce] the venue, including this one, was a diner or restaurant; three, in each instance the . . . indecency began from under a table, including the present case; four, in each instance the event began with a request for a beverage; five, in each instance the indecency was observed, when the waitress returned with a beverage; six, in each instance the waitress was a female; seven, in each instance the waitress was a younger rather than older employee; and, eight, each victim described the person performing the . . . indecent act, as a Hispanic male with similar features to that of the defendant. The same or similar identifiers are so common to one another that they do form a criminal logo, which justifies the inference that the individual who committed the first offense also committed the second and third and so on.

“Under these facts and circumstances this court concludes that the characteristics of the incidences offer[ed] by the state were sufficiently distinctive

122

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 115

State v. Rodriguez

it was allowed to consider the evidence.² We therefore reject the defendant's claim that the court committed plain error by admitting the uncharged misconduct evidence.

II

The defendant claims that he is entitled to plain error reversal for a second reason—that the court improperly instructed the jury on the uncharged misconduct evidence. We disagree.

The defendant concedes that he failed to file a request to charge or object to the court's proposed instructions and acknowledges waiver pursuant to State v. Kitchens, 299 Conn. 447, 10 A.3d 942 (2011). The defendant argues, however, that he is nonetheless entitled to plain error reversal pursuant to State v. McClain, 324 Conn.

and unique to be like a signature, and, thus, the defendant's participation in those incidences are highly probative on the issue of the identity of a complainant's offender in this case, as well as the common plan or scheme and, therefore, outweigh any prejudicial effect of its admittance.

"However, the court will issue a . . . limiting instruction before the first witness is presented by the state and the court has gone over that instruction with the parties and the parties are satisfied with the instruction that the court is prepared to give."

²The court instructed the jury on June 6, 2017: "Ladies and gentlemen, the state is going to call a witness, who's going to testify to certain acts of . . . misconduct of the defendant. And, now, they're going to be offering that evidence through one, two or three separate witnesses, during this trial and I want to give you now a limiting instruction on how to use that type of evidence.

"That type of evidence is not being admitted to prove the bad character, propensity or criminal tendency of the defendant, it's being admitted solely to show or establish the identity of the person who committed the crime alleged, that the commission of the crimes may have followed a common plan or scheme or a system of criminal activity engaged in, by the defendant. You may not consider such evidence as establishing a predisposition on the part of the defendant to commit any of the crimes charged or to demonstrate a criminal propensity.

"Evidence of a prior offense, on its own, is not sufficient to prove the defendant guilty of the crimes charged in this information.

"Bear in mind, as you consider this evidence that, at all times, the state does have the burden of proving that the defendant committed each of the elements of the offenses charged, in the present case. And, I remind you that the defendant is not on trial for any act, conduct or offense not charged in the present information."

On June 7, 2017, the court gave substantially similar instructions to the jury on two separate occasions.

192 Conn. App. 115

AUGUST, 2019

123

State v. Rodriguez

802, 815, 155 A.3d 209 (2017). We have reviewed the record and conclude that the defendant is not entitled to plain error reversal because the jury instructions pertaining to the uncharged misconduct evidence do not rise to the level of egregiousness and harm that would warrant reversal under the plain error doctrine. “[An appellant] cannot prevail under [the plain error doctrine] . . . unless he demonstrates that the claimed error is both so clear and so harmful that a failure to reverse the judgment would result in manifest injustice.” (Emphasis omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 812. The defendant’s apparent claim, that no jury instructions were proper given that the uncharged misconduct evidence ought not to have been admitted, is misguided. The uncharged misconduct evidence was admitted without objection from the defendant, and, accordingly, the court was required to instruct the jury as to how to consider that evidence. Moreover, the defendant fails to articulate in what precise respect the jury instructions at issue were flawed and caused harm. We reject the defendant’s claim for plain error reversal.

III

The defendant’s third claim is that the trial court abused its discretion in denying his motion to sever the public indecency, breach of the peace, and motor vehicle charges from the failure to appear charges. We disagree.

“The principles that govern our review of a trial court’s ruling on a motion for joinder or a motion for severance are well established. Practice Book § 41-19 provides that, [t]he judicial authority may, upon its own motion or the motion of any party, order that two or more informations, whether against the same defendant or different defendants, be tried together. . . . In deciding whether to [join informations] for trial, the trial court enjoys broad discretion, which, in the absence of

124

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 115

State v. Rodriguez

manifest abuse, an appellate court may not disturb. . . . The defendant bears a heavy burden of showing that [joinder] resulted in substantial injustice, and that any resulting prejudice was beyond the curative power of the court's instructions." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Payne, 303 Conn. 538, 543–44, 34 A.3d 370 (2012).

"The court's discretion regarding joinder . . . is not unlimited; rather, that discretion must be exercised in a manner consistent with the defendant's right to a fair trial. Consequently, we have identified several factors that a trial court should consider in deciding whether a severance may be necessary to avoid undue prejudice resulting from consolidation of multiple charges for trial. These factors include: (1) whether the charges involve discrete, easily distinguishable factual scenarios; (2) whether the crimes were of a violent nature or concerned brutal or shocking conduct on the defendant's part; and (3) the duration and complexity of the trial. . . . If any or all of these factors are present, a reviewing court must decide whether the trial court's jury instructions cured any prejudice that might have occurred." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 545. "[A]lthough a curative instruction is not inevitably sufficient to overcome the prejudicial impact of [inadmissible other crimes] evidence . . . where the likelihood of prejudice is not overwhelming, such curative instructions may tip the balance in favor of a finding that the defendant's right to a fair trial has been preserved." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. McKethan, 184 Conn. App. 187, 198, 194 A.3d 293, cert. denied, 330 Conn. 931, 194 A.3d 779 (2018).

Prior to trial, the defendant filed a motion to sever the public indecency, breach of the peace, and motor vehicle charges from the failure to appear charges. In support of that motion, the defendant argued that if he were to testify as to the failure to appear charges, possible misconduct evidence may be used for impeachment purposes or used substantively with respect to the public indecency charge. Therefore, the defendant asserted that a joinder of the charges would implicate his constitutional right to remain silent.

The trial court addressed the defendant's motion to sever under the three part analysis set forth in State v. Boscarino, 204 Conn. 714, 722–24, 529 A.2d 1260 (1987). The court first determined that the charges against the defendant related to distinct factual scenarios and that the state would be able to present its evidence in an orderly manner. Second, it found that the crimes charged against the defendant were not of a violent, brutal or shocking nature, given that all charges brought against the defendant were misdemeanor charges. Third, it found that the trial would be short and “not terribly complex.” The court concluded that all three factors weighed against severance and denied the motion to sever.

The court, however, expressed concern that if the jury learned that the failure to appear charges were associated with the date of trial for the public indecency and breach of the peace charges, the jury could infer a consciousness of guilt on the part of the defendant. It also was concerned that if the defendant were to testify as to certain charges but not others, the jury may infer an admission of guilt from the defendant's selective silence. The court thus gave curative instructions to the potential jurors prior to jury selection, on April 25, 2017, and before the start of evidence, on June 6, 2017, to address any possible prejudice caused by the consolidation of charges.³

³ On April 25, 2017, the court instructed the potential jurors as follows: “[W]hen the state calls witnesses to elicit information, in other words, evidence, to support its allegation that [the defendant] failed to appear in court on two separate dates, those charges ha[ve] absolutely nothing to do with the other four charges alleged by the state, there is no connection whatsoever. You may be sitting there and asking yourself; well, then why are they included in this trial? The answer is; judicial economy. We're going to try them all together, but you must be certain, I can't express in strong enough terms, that the evidence presented to support the state's case for

On appeal, the defendant argues that “[t]he repulsive and shocking nature of the [public indecency and breach of the peace] crimes prejudiced [his] ability to receive a fair trial on the failure to appear charges.” The defendant further argues that he chose to testify as to all charges, even though he wanted to testify only as to the failure to appear charges, because his silence would be damaging in the face of his express denial of the failure to appear charges. The defendant also argues that his right to remain silent was impermissibly burdened; however, he waived this constitutional claim by testifying as to all charges. More specifically, the defendant argues that the court erred in finding that the second Boscarino factor—whether the crimes were of a violent nature or concerned brutal or shocking conduct on his part—weighed against severance because his conduct in the diner was shocking. We disagree.

The defendant relies on State v. Payne, supra, 303 Conn. 538, for the standard of whether the crimes were of a violent nature or concerned brutal or shocking possible failures to appear on [the defendant’s] behalf have absolutely nothing to do and no connection with any allegations the state may have made on [the defendant] in count one, in count two, in count three, in count four.

“Therefore, there is the possibility that [the defendant] does not testify on his own behalf in connection with any of the six charges. Likewise, there’s the possibility that [the defendant] may elect to testify on his own behalf, only with respect to some of the charges. Or, the possibility also exists that [the defendant] may elect to testify on his own behalf, with respect to all six charges. We don’t know what his election will be yet, because the case has not [begun] yet. However, I must caution you; should [the defendant] testify on his own behalf, in connection with some of the charges, but not with respect to all of the charges, you are to draw absolutely no negative inference, but the fact that he’s chosen to address and defend himself on some of the charges, but not all of the charges. He has a constitutional right not to testify and that remains with him throughout the entirety of this trial.”

On June 6, 2017, the trial court again instructed the jury: “The defendant may or may not testify in this case. An accused person has the option to testify or not to testify at the trial. He is under no obligation to testify. He has a constitutional right not to testify. You must draw no unfavorable inference from the defendant’s choice not to testify, if that is his election.”

192 Conn. App. 115

AUGUST, 2019

127

State v. Rodriguez

conduct on the defendant's part. In Payne, our Supreme Court concluded that the defendant's felony murder of a victim was significantly more brutal and shocking than an attempt to tamper with jurors and, therefore, weighed in favor of severance. Id., 552. In reaching that conclusion, our Supreme Court determined that "[w]hether one or more offenses involved brutal or shocking conduct likely to arouse the passions of the jurors must be ascertained by comparing the relative levels of violence used to perpetrate the offenses charged in each information." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 551.

In the present case, the public indecency and breach of the peace charges are not crimes of violence such as murder. Although the conduct for which the defendant was convicted could certainly be perceived as deeply offensive, none of the crimes rise to the level of "shocking" so as to warrant severance. See id., 551–52 (murder by shooting victim at close range was brutal and shocking as compared to jury tampering where no violence was involved); State v. McKethan, supra, 184 Conn. App. 197–98 (killing victim in middle of night in isolated location was brutal and shocking as compared to drug and firearm possession case where no violence was involved); contra State v. LaFleur, 307 Conn. 115, 160–61, 51 A.3d 1048 (2012) (assault by punching victim in face twenty to thirty times was not so shocking or brutal that another assault by punching victim once in face was compromised by joinder); State v. Jennings, 216 Conn. 647, 651–52, 659, 583 A.2d 915 (1990) (assault by cutting victim's neck with box cutter and punching, kicking, and throwing victim around parking lot, and assault by cutting victim's finger and arm with knife were not brutal and shocking because "[t]he physical harm that was inflicted on the victim, although serious, was not disabling, and the element of sexual derangement present in Boscarino was absent"); State v. Santaniello, 96 Conn. App. 646, 657, 902 A.2d 1 (charges of

128

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 128

State v. Battle

sexual assault and attempted murder were not so brutal or shocking that they would inflame passions of jury given that victim was not child and details of crimes were not so brutal and shocking as to “impair the jury’s ability to consider the charges set forth in the informations in a fair manner”), cert. denied, 280 Conn. 920, 908 A.2d 545 (2006); State v. Smith, 88 Conn. App. 275, 279, 869 A.2d 258 (robberies in which defendant threatened use of force by implying that he had firearm were not particularly brutal or shocking), cert. denied, 273 Conn. 940, 875 A.2d 45 (2005). Even if the public indecency and breach of the peace charges shocked or aroused the passions of the jurors, any prejudice that might have resulted was ameliorated by the trial court’s curative instructions.⁴ Further, the evidence was overwhelming as to all charges against the defendant. We conclude, therefore, that the court did not abuse its discretion by denying the defendant’s motion to sever.

The judgment is affirmed.

In this opinion the other judges concurred.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT v. REGGIE BATTLE
(AC 40578)

DiPentima, C. J., and Bright and Moll, Js.

Syllabus

The defendant, who had been convicted of carrying a pistol without a permit, criminal trespass and violation of probation, appealed to this court from the judgment of the trial court dismissing his motion to correct an illegal sentence. In November, 2005, the defendant had been sentenced to twenty years of incarceration, execution suspended after nine years, and five years of probation, in connection with a guilty plea to conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree and his admission to violating his probation. In January, 2014, he admitted to a violation of probation and pleaded guilty to various crimes regarding the carrying and possession of a pistol. The trial court sentenced him to five years of incarceration and six years of special parole, and revoked his probation. Thereafter, ⁴ See footnote 3 of this opinion.

State v. Battle

the defendant filed a motion to correct an illegal sentence, which the trial court dismissed. Although the trial court concluded that the defendant's claim did not fall within the ambit of the rule of practice (§ 43-22) governing motions to correct an illegal sentence, it proceeded to consider and reject the merits of the defendant's motion, and concluded that a sentence that included a period of special parole was authorized by our statutes and case law. On appeal to this court, the defendant claimed that the trial court improperly dismissed his motion to correct an illegal sentence. Held:

1. The trial court improperly determined that it lacked jurisdiction to consider the defendant's motion to correct an illegal sentence and dismissed the motion, in which the defendant alleged that special parole cannot be imposed following a violation of probation; because the defendant challenged the sentence imposed, rather than the events leading to his conviction, he set forth a colorable claim regarding the legality of the sentence imposed for violation of his probation, and the trial court, therefore, had jurisdiction to consider the merits of the defendant's motion.
2. The defendant could not prevail on his claim that the imposition of special parole, following a determination that he had violated his probation, constituted an illegal sentence: the statute governing violation of probation (§ 53a-32 [d] [4]) specifically authorizes the trial court to revoke a sentence of probation and, in the event that the probation has been revoked, provides that the court shall require the defendant to serve the sentence imposed or impose any lesser sentence, and the defendant's sentence in 2014, including the use of special parole, fell within the "any lesser sentence" language of § 53a-32 (d); accordingly, the use of special parole following a finding of a violation of probation is authorized by § 53a-32, and the imposition of special parole did not result in an illegal sentence.
3. The defendant could not prevail on his unpreserved claim that he was denied due process of law when his motion to correct an illegal sentence was not acted on by the specific judge who had sentenced him; the defendant cited no appellate authority holding that a motion to correct an illegal sentence or a sentence imposed in an illegal manner must be heard and adjudicated by the particular judge who imposed the sentence, the case law cited by the defendant, at most, suggested that the sentencing judge may be the judicial authority who entertains such a motion, and because there was nothing that suggested that the defendant was deprived of a full and fair proceeding with regard to the motion to correct and the defendant did not suffer a due process violation, his unpreserved claim failed under the third prong of State v. Golding (213 Conn. 233).

Argued March 11—officially released August 27, 2019

Procedural History

Information charging the defendant with the crimes of carrying a pistol without a permit and criminal pos-

130

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 128

State v. Battle

session of a pistol, and with violation of probation, brought to the Superior Court in the judicial district of Hartford, where the defendant was presented to the court, Alexander, J., on a plea of guilty; judgment of guilty in accordance with plea; thereafter, the court, Dewey, J., dismissed the defendant's motion to correct an illegal sentence, and the defendant appealed to this court. Improper form of judgment; judgment directed.

Temmy Ann Miller, with whom were Aimee Lynn Mahon and, on the brief, Nicholas A. Marolda, for the appellant (defendant).

Mitchell S. Brody, senior assistant state's attorney, with whom, on the brief, were Gail P. Hardy, state's attorney, and Elizabeth Tanaka, former assistant state's attorney, for the appellee (state).

Opinion

DiPENTIMA, C. J. The defendant, Reggie Battle, appeals from the judgment of the trial court dismissing his motion to correct an illegal sentence. On appeal, the defendant claims that (1) the court improperly concluded that it lacked jurisdiction to consider his motion to correct an illegal sentence, (2) the court improperly concluded that the use of special parole following the finding of a probation violation did not constitute an illegal sentence and (3) he was denied due process of law when his motion to correct an illegal sentence was not acted upon by the judge who had sentenced him. We conclude that the trial court had jurisdiction to consider the defendant's motion to correct an illegal sentence but are not persuaded by his second and third claims. Accordingly, the form of the judgment is improper, and we reverse the judgment dismissing the defendant's motion to correct an illegal sentence and remand the case with direction to render judgment denying the defendant's motion.

The following facts and procedural history are relevant to this appeal. On November 7, 2005, the defendant

192 Conn. App. 128

AUGUST, 2019

131

State v. Battle

appeared before the court, Miano, J., and pleaded guilty to conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree in violation of General Statutes §§ 53a-48 and 53a-59 (a) (1) and admitted a violation of probation pursuant to General Statutes § 53a-32. After hearing the prosecutor's recitation of the facts¹ and conducting a plea canvass, the court accepted the defendant's guilty plea and admission. The defendant waived a presentence investigation report, and the court sentenced him in accordance with the parties' agreement. Specifically, the court sentenced the defendant to twenty years incarceration, execution suspended after nine years, and five years of probation² for the conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree charge. The court also terminated the defendant's probation.³

On January 13, 2014, the defendant appeared before the court, Alexander, J., and admitted a violation of probation, pursuant to § 53a-32, and pleaded guilty to carrying a pistol without a permit in violation of General Statutes § 29-35 (a) and criminal possession of a pistol in violation of § 53a-217c. The prosecutor set forth the ¹ The prosecutor made the following statement at the hearing: "The factual basis for the conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree, [the defendant and Bryon Taylor] along with a Lionel Gardner on November 18, 2004, got into an altercation, a verbal altercation with a William Hardy at the Westfarms Mall. These three gentlemen then chased Mr. Hardy on the highway, Mr. Hardy got off of the highway, both [the defendant] and Mr. Taylor fired shots at Mr. Hardy's car, one of them struck the car.

"They were subsequently—this car that Mr. Gardner was driving with these two defendants in it, was subsequently stopped by the Farmington Police and these two were captured right there. A short time later Mr. Gardner was captured. They found guns in their car, the casings that were found in the area where the shots were fired were, in fact, fired from those guns that they took out of the cars. . . .

"With respect to [the defendant's] violation of probation, on March 26 of 2003 . . . Judge Ward convicted him of larceny in the fourth degree, his sentence was one year suspended, two years probation."

² The court ordered, as a condition of probation, that the defendant not possess any handguns, firearms or long guns.

³ The prosecutor nolle two other charges pending against the defendant.

underlying facts⁴ and, following a canvass, the court accepted the defendant's guilty plea and admission. The court then sentenced the defendant as follows: "[The] court will impose the agreement as indicated. On the violation of probation, it is ordered revoked; five years to serve, six years of special parole. On the charge of [carrying a] pistol without [a] permit, it is the sentence of the court that you receive five years to serve, which will run concurrent with the previous sentence. On the charge of criminal possession of a firearm, five years to serve, also concurrent."

On April 7, 2016, the self-represented defendant filed a motion to correct an illegal sentence pursuant to Practice Book § 43-22.⁵ On November 1, 2016, the defendant, then represented by counsel, filed an amended motion to correct, arguing that General Statutes § 54-125e expressly limits the use of special parole to those ⁴ Specifically, the prosecutor stated: "[T]he defendant was sentenced on November 7, 2005, on a conspiracy [to commit] assault in the first degree to twenty years suspended after nine years, five years of probation. He began his probation on December 26, 2012, and he was arrested for the gun case on September 1, 2013. . . . He was arrested at 2:30 in the morning. Police had received a tip from a confidential informant giving a lengthy description of an individual carrying a gun in his waistband. They went to the area where the confidential informant said he would be. They saw this defendant acting—matching the description and acting in a way that made them believe that he was carrying a weapon.

"He was near the inside of Paul's Ranch House and they had some concerns about people inside the business, and they asked him, for the safety of the others, whether or not he was in possession of a firearm without a permit—without a firearm basically, and he said he was and he explained to them, the police officers, you know it's crazy out here, which is kind of ironic since his original conviction was for shooting out of a car.

"And they patted him down and found a Smith & Wesson 9 mm with eleven live rounds in it. They did a search and found out he did not have a permit for it, and since he is a convicted felon from his prior felony he was—should not have been in possession of this weapon either"

⁵ Practice Book § 43-22 provides: "The judicial authority may at any time correct an illegal sentence or other illegal disposition, or it may correct a sentence imposed in an illegal manner or any other disposition made in an illegal manner."

192 Conn. App. 128

AUGUST, 2019

133

State v. Battle

convicted of a crime and that a violation of probation is not a crime. Accordingly, the defendant claimed that his sentence was illegal. On December 23, 2016, the state filed an objection to the defendant's amended motion to correct.

On March 16, 2017, the court, Dewey, J., issued a memorandum of decision dismissing the defendant's motion to correct an illegal sentence. Although the court concluded that the defendant's claim did not fall within the ambit of Practice Book § 43-22, it proceeded to consider, and reject, the merits of his motion. Specifically, the court reasoned that, in connection with disposing of a charge of violation of probation, a sentence that includes a period of special parole was authorized by the General Statutes and our case law. This appeal followed. Additional facts will be set forth as necessary.

I

The defendant first claims that the court improperly concluded that it lacked jurisdiction to consider his motion to correct an illegal sentence. Specifically, he argues that his claim that a sentence of special parole on a violation of probation was not permitted under our statutes fell within the limited jurisdiction authorized for a motion to correct an illegal sentence. We agree with the defendant.

This claim presents a question of law subject to the plenary standard of review. State v. Mukhtar, 189 Conn. App. 144, 148, 207 A.3d 29 (2019). It requires us to “consider whether the defendant has raised a colorable claim within the scope of Practice Book § 43-22 that would, if the merits of the claim were reached and decided in the defendant's favor, require correction of a sentence. . . . In the absence of a colorable claim requiring correction, the trial court has no jurisdiction to modify the sentence. . . . A colorable claim is one that is superficially well founded but that may ultimately be deemed invalid For a claim to be colorable, the defendant need not convince the trial court that he necessarily will prevail; he must demonstrate simply that he might prevail. . . . The jurisdictional and merits inquiries are separate; whether the defendant ultimately succeeds on the merits of his claim does not affect the trial court’s jurisdiction to hear it.” (Citations omitted; emphasis omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Evans, 329 Conn. 770, 783–84, 189 A.3d 1184 (2018), cert. denied, U.S. , 139 S. Ct. 1304, 203 L. Ed. 2d 425 (2019).

“[Our Supreme Court] has held that the jurisdiction of the sentencing court terminates once a defendant’s sentence has begun, and, therefore, that court may no longer take any action affecting a defendant’s sentence unless it expressly has been authorized to act. . . . Practice Book § 43-22, which provides the trial court with such authority, provides that [t]he judicial authority may at any time correct an illegal sentence or other illegal disposition, or it may correct a sentence imposed in an illegal manner or any other disposition made in an illegal manner. An illegal sentence is essentially one which either exceeds the relevant statutory maximum limits, violates a defendant’s right against double jeopardy, is ambiguous, or is internally contradictory. . . . We previously have noted that a defendant may challenge his or her criminal sentence on the ground that it is illegal by raising the issue on direct appeal or by filing a motion pursuant to § 43-22 with the judicial authority, namely, the trial court.” (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Tabone, 279 Conn. 527, 533–34, 902 A.2d 1058 (2006); see also State v. Evans, supra, 329 Conn. 778. Simply stated, “a challenge to the legality of a sentence focuses not on what transpired during the trial or on the underlying conviction. In order for the court to have jurisdiction over a motion to correct an illegal sentence after the sentence

192 Conn. App. 128

AUGUST, 2019

135

State v. Battle

has been executed, the sentencing proceeding, and not the trial leading to the conviction, must be the subject of the attack.” (Emphasis omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Evans, supra, 779.

The defendant argued in his motion to correct an illegal sentence that special parole cannot be imposed following a violation of probation. Specifically, he contended that the text of § 54-125e establishes that special parole may be imposed only for the conviction of a crime and that a violation of probation hearing is not a stage of a criminal prosecution. Further, he claimed that § 53a-32 (d), which sets forth the court’s options following a finding of a probation violation, does not include special parole. In other words, the defendant challenged the sentence imposed, rather than the events leading to his conviction. Because the defendant set forth a colorable claim regarding the legality of the sentence imposed for violating his probation, the trial court had jurisdiction to consider the merits of the defendant’s motion. We conclude, therefore, that the court improperly dismissed the motion to correct an illegal sentence filed by the defendant.

II

Having concluded that the court had jurisdiction to decide the defendant’s claim, we turn to the defendant’s contention that the imposition of special parole, following the determination that he had violated his probation, constituted an illegal sentence. Specifically, he argues that the use of special parole is not authorized by § 53a-32 (d) (4) under the facts of this case. We are not persuaded by the defendant’s restrictive interpretation of the relevant statutes and principles relating to sentencing in probation violation proceedings. Accordingly, we disagree with the defendant’s claim.⁶

⁶ We note that “[o]nce the [trial] court found that it lacked subject matter jurisdiction, any ruling on the merits of the defendant’s motion was improper.” State v. Abraham, 152 Conn. App. 709, 724, 99 A.3d 1258 (2014). Nevertheless, “[i]f the record . . . was adequate for review of the court’s

In the court's decision, it reviewed the relevant statutes, namely, General Statutes §§ 53a-28 and 53a-32 (d). Next, it observed that "[t]he provisions relating to alternatives to incarceration, special parole and probation, must be read in harmony." The court further stated that "[i]n State v. Santos T., 146 Conn. App. 532, 535–36, 77 A.3d 931, [cert. denied, 310 Conn. 965, 83 A.3d 345] (2013), the Connecticut Appellate Court implicitly recognized a trial court's authority to impose a term of special parole after a parole violation hearing and sentencing."⁷ Finally, it reasoned that the dispositional phase of a probation revocation proceeding, in substance, generally is indistinguishable from that following a conviction and that our law affords the same discretion to the court in both instances. Ultimately, the court rejected the defendant's argument that the imposition of special parole following a finding of a probation violation constituted an illegal sentence.

On appeal, the defendant maintains that the imposition of special parole following the determination of a probation violation is not authorized by § 53a-32 and, therefore, constitutes an illegal sentence. He argues that § 53a-32 does not include specifically special parole and that its omission cannot be rectified by judicial ruling, or if our determination as to the propriety of [the trial court's] ruling was solely dependent on our resolution of an issue of law, we could, in the interest of judicial economy, consider the ruling at a party's request or sua sponte after determining that our review would not prejudice the defendant and the appellee was entitled as a matter of law to a ruling in its favor." Id., 724–25. Here, the record is adequate for our review, the court's determination that the imposition of special parole did not constitute an illegal sentence involves a question of law, the state is entitled as a matter of law to a ruling in its favor, and the defendant will not be prejudiced by our review. We also note that both parties addressed the issues in their briefs. Accordingly, we proceed to review the court's ruling on the merits of the defendant's motion.

⁷ In State v. Santos T., supra, 146 Conn. App. 533–34, the defendant did not challenge the propriety of the imposition of special parole following a finding of a probation violation.

192 Conn. App. 128

AUGUST, 2019

137

State v. Battle

interpretation, but rather only by legislative action. After consideration of the relevant statutes and case law, we disagree with the defendant's view of § 53a-32.

The defendant's claim requires us to engage in statutory construction. "The process of statutory interpretation involves the determination of the meaning of the statutory language as applied to the facts of the case When construing a statute, [o]ur fundamental objective is to ascertain and give effect to the apparent intent of the legislature. . . . In other words, we seek to determine, in a reasoned manner, the meaning of the statutory language as applied to the facts of [the] case In seeking to determine that meaning . . . [General Statutes] § 1-2z directs us first to consider the text of the statute itself and its relationship to other statutes. If, after examining such text and considering such relationship, the meaning of such text is plain and unambiguous and does not yield absurd or unworkable results, extratextual evidence of the meaning of the statute shall not be considered. . . . Issues of statutory construction raise questions of law, over which we exercise plenary review." (Citation omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Hearl, 182 Conn. App. 237, 252, 190 A.3d 42, cert. denied, 330 Conn. 903, 192 A.3d 425 (2018). "Included in the threshold inquiry are our prior interpretations of the statutory language, which we have stated are encompassed in the term 'text' as used in § 1-2z. See Hummel v. Marten Transport, Ltd., 282 Conn. 477, 497–99, 923 A.2d 657 (2007)." State v. Daniel B., 331 Conn. 1, 13, 201 A.3d 989 (2019); see also State v. Boyd, 272 Conn. 72, 78, 861 A.2d 1155 (2004) (relevant legislation and precedent guide process of statutory interpretation).

We begin with the relevant statutory language. Section 53a-32 (d) provides: "If [a violation of probation] is established, the court may: (1) Continue the sentence of probation or conditional discharge; (2) modify or enlarge the conditions of probation or conditional discharge; (3) extend the period of probation or conditional discharge, provided the original period with any extensions shall not exceed the periods authorized by section 53a-29; or (4) revoke the sentence of probation or conditional discharge. If such sentence is revoked, the court shall require the defendant to serve the sentence imposed or impose any lesser sentence. Any such lesser sentence may include a term of imprisonment, all or a portion of which may be suspended entirely or after a period set by the court, followed by a period of probation with such conditions as the court may establish. No such revocation shall be ordered, except upon consideration of the whole record and unless such violation is established by the introduction of reliable and probative evidence and by a preponderance of the evidence.” (Emphasis added.)

Section 53a-32 is a part of a larger statutory framework applicable to sentences and sentencing procedure. Our Supreme Court has recognized “that our rather intricate sentencing scheme is not always a model of clarity and that sometimes it is difficult to ascertain the rationale underlying all of its components. Nevertheless, it is our duty to seek to reconcile that scheme into a coherent system, in a manner that effectuates, to the greatest extent possible, the legislative intent behind the scheme.” State v. Victor O., 320 Conn. 239, 259, 128 A.3d 940 (2016); see also State v. Ferdinand R., 132 Conn. App. 594, 600, 33 A.3d 793 (2011) (“When we interpret statutory text, the legislature, in amending or enacting statutes, always [is] presumed to have created a harmonious and consistent body of law Thus, we are required to read statutes together when they [are] related to the same subject matter Accordingly, [i]n determining the meaning of a statute . . . we look not only at the provision at issue, but also to the broader statutory scheme to ensure

192 Conn. App. 128

AUGUST, 2019

139

State v. Battle

the coherency of our construction” [internal quotation marks omitted]), aff’d, 310 Conn. 686, 82 A.3d 599 (2013); see generally Tomlinson v. Tomlinson, 305 Conn. 539, 552, 46 A.3d 112 (2012). We, therefore, also must consider § 53a-28,⁸ which provides the authorized sentencing options for those convicted of an offense, which include imprisonment, probation, conditional discharge and special parole as provided under § 54-125e.⁹

A brief summary of the history of special parole is informative. “[I]n 1998, [t]he legislature created the concept of special parole as a new sentencing option . . . by enacting § 54-125e. . . . The legislative history surrounding § 54-125e indicates that it was intended to operate as a sentencing option in cases [in which] the judge wanted additional supervision of a defendant after the completion of his prison sentence. Michael Mullen, the chairman of the Connecticut [B]oard of ⁸ General Statutes § 53a-28 provides in relevant part: “(a) . . . [E]very person convicted of an offense shall be sentenced in accordance with this title.

“(b) Except as provided in section 53a-46a, when a person is convicted of an offense, the court shall impose one of the following sentences: (1) A term of imprisonment; or (2) a sentence authorized by section 18-65a or 18-73; or (3) a fine; or (4) a term of imprisonment and a fine; or (5) a term of imprisonment, with the execution of such sentence of imprisonment suspended, entirely or after a period set by the court, and a period of probation or a period of conditional discharge; or (6) a term of imprisonment, with the execution of such sentence of imprisonment suspended, entirely or after a period set by the court, and a fine and a period of probation or a period of conditional discharge; or (7) a fine and a sentence authorized by section 18-65a or 18-73; or (8) a sentence of unconditional discharge; or (9) a term of imprisonment and a period of special parole as provided in section 54-125e, except that the court may not impose a period of special parole for convictions of offenses under chapter 420b.”

⁹ General Statutes § 54-125e (a) provides in relevant part: “Any person convicted of a crime committed on or after October 1, 1998, who received a definite sentence of more than two years followed by a period of special parole shall, at the expiration of the maximum term or terms of imprisonment imposed by the court, be automatically transferred to the jurisdiction of the chairperson of the Board of Pardons and Paroles”

140

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 128

State v. Battle

[P]arole, testified before the [J]udiciary [C]ommittee and described special parole as a sentencing option [that] ensures intense supervision of convicted felons after they're released to the community and allows the imposition of parole stipulations on . . . released inmate[s] to ensure their successful incremental [reentry] into society or if they violate their stipulations, speedy [reincarceration] before they commit [other] crime[s]. . . .

“At the same time that it enacted § 54-125e, the legislature amended § 54-128 to provide that a sentence consisting of a term of imprisonment followed by a period of special parole shall not exceed the maximum sentence of incarceration authorized for the offense for which the person was convicted. . . . [T]he legislature, in enacting § 54-125e intended to permit the imposition of special parole as a sentencing option [that] ensures intense supervision of convicted felons after [they are] released to the community and allows the imposition of parole stipulations on the released inmate. At the same time, the legislature intended to prevent the trial court from sentencing a defendant to a term of imprisonment and to a period of special parole, the total combined length of which exceeds the maximum sentence of imprisonment for the offense [of] which the defendant was convicted. . . . It is clear, therefore, that the legislature intended that special parole, as a form of supervised release, should be available to trial courts, provided that its imposition, in combination with a term of incarceration, does not exceed the maximum statutory period of incarceration permitted by law.” (Citations omitted; footnote omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Victor O., supra, 320 Conn. 252–53.

Our Supreme Court has explained the difference between probation and special parole. “Pursuant to § 54-128 (c), when a defendant violates special parole,

192 Conn. App. 128

AUGUST, 2019

141

State v. Battle

he is subject to incarceration only for a period equal to the unexpired portion of the period of special parole. Thus, for a violation that occurs on the final day of the defendant's special parole term, the defendant would be exposed to one day of incarceration. Special parole, therefore, exposes a defendant to a decreasing period of incarceration as the term of special parole is served. On the other hand, when a defendant violates his probation, the court may revoke his probation, and if revoked, the court shall require the defendant to serve the sentence imposed or impose any lesser sentence. General Statutes (Rev. to 1999) § 53a-32 (b) (4). Accordingly, if the defendant in the present case were to violate his probation on the final day of his ten year term, he would be exposed to the full suspended sentence of ten years incarceration. Thus, in contrast to a term of special parole, the defendant is exposed to incarceration for the full length of the suspended sentence, with no decrease in exposure as the probationary period is served, for the entirety of the probationary period.” (Emphasis added; footnote omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Tabone, 292 Conn. 417, 429, 973 A.2d 74 (2009).

The defendant argues that because § 53a-32 (d) does not mention special parole specifically, it therefore prohibits its imposition following the revocation of probation. We disagree with the defendant's contention.

As noted by the trial court, § 53a-28 (d) provides in relevant part that “[a] sentence to a period of probation . . . shall be deemed a revocable disposition, in that such sentence shall be tentative to the extent that it may be altered or revoked in accordance with said sections but for all other purposes it shall be deemed to be a final judgment of conviction.” (Emphasis added.) Section 53a-32 (d) (4) specifically authorizes the court to revoke the sentence of probation. In the event that the probation has been revoked, the court shall require

142

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 128

State v. Battle

the defendant to serve the sentence imposed or impose any lesser sentence. Id.

As noted by our Supreme Court in State v. Tabone, supra, 292 Conn. 429, special parole, as distinct from probation, exposes a defendant to a decreasing period of incarceration as the term of special parole is served. In the present case, the defendant, in November, 2005, was sentenced to twenty years of incarceration, execution suspended after nine years, and five years of probation. Following his release from custody, he faced the possibility of eleven years of incarceration in the event he violated his probation. In 2014, the court concluded that he had violated his probation and had the option of imposing a sentence of up to eleven years of incarceration. Instead, the court imposed a sentence of five years of incarceration and six years of special parole. The 2014 sentence, including the use of special parole, falls within the “any lesser sentence” language of § 53a-32 (d). Accordingly, we are persuaded that the use of special parole following a finding of a violation of probation is authorized by § 53a-32. For these reasons, we conclude that, in the present case, the imposition of special parole did not result in an illegal sentence.

III

Finally, the defendant claims that he was denied due process of law when his motion to correct an illegal sentence was not acted upon by the specific judge who had sentenced him. Specifically, he argues that Judge Alexander, who found that the defendant had violated his probation and sentenced him to a period of special parole, should have acted upon the motion to correct instead of Judge Dewey because “the sentencing court . . . was in a better position to evaluate the merits of the defendant’s claims in his motion to correct.” According to the defendant, the failure to refer the motion to correct to Judge Alexander constituted a violation of his right to due process. We are not persuaded.

192 Conn. App. 128

AUGUST, 2019

143

State v. Battle

As previously noted, Judge Miano sentenced the defendant following his conviction in 2005. Subsequent to his release from custody, Judge Alexander found, in 2014, that the defendant had violated his probation, and sentenced him, inter alia, to a period of special parole. The defendant filed an amended motion to correct on November 1, 2016. On January 17, 2017, Judge Dewey conducted a hearing¹⁰ on the defendant's motion to correct an illegal sentence and issued a memorandum of decision on March 16, 2017.

The defendant did not raise his due process claim¹¹ in his motion to correct an illegal sentence or at the January 17, 2017 hearing. Accordingly, he requests review pursuant to State v. Golding, 213 Conn. 233, 239–40, 567 A.2d 823 (1989), as modified by In re Yasiel R., 317 Conn. 773, 120 A.3d 1188 (2015).¹² We agree with “[Defense Counsel]: Prior to the commencement of argument on this case, the state and I have had some discussions with respect to a resolution of this case, and I know we brought this to the court's attention on a prior occasion. And just for the benefit of [the defendant], Judge Alexander had indicated to me that she would be conferring with the court concerning this, I don't know if that's taken place, but, for the record, [the defendant] is—desires of taking advantage of the offer that the state has conveyed.

¹⁰ At the outset of the January 17, 2017 hearing, the following colloquy occurred:

“The Court: The difficulty is if the position of the parties is that it's an illegal sentence I can't accept the offer that was made. I did discuss it with Judge Alexander; she's not inclined.

“[Defense Counsel]: All right. Very well.”

The defendant argues that this situation could have been avoided if Judge Alexander had been assigned to hear and decided the defendant's motion to correct. Assuming, arguendo, that to be true, the defendant nevertheless failed to establish a due process violation.

¹¹ In his appellate brief, the defendant has not raised or briefed any claims pursuant to the state constitution. Accordingly, we treat his claim as limited to the federal constitution. See, e.g., State v. Delgado, 323 Conn. 801, 805 n.4, 151 A.3d 345 (2016).

¹² “[A] defendant can prevail on a claim of constitutional error not preserved at trial only if all of the following conditions are met: (1) the record is adequate to review the alleged claim of error; (2) the claim is of constitutional magnitude alleging the violation of a fundamental right; (3) the alleged constitutional violation . . . exists and . . . deprived the defendant of a

144

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 128

State v. Battle

the defendant that the record is adequate and that his claim is of constitutional magnitude, and therefore his claim is reviewable pursuant to the Golding doctrine. State v. Jerrell R., 187 Conn. App. 537, 543, 202 A.3d 1044 (first two Golding prongs address reviewability of claim while last two pertain to merits of claim), cert. denied, 331 Conn. 918, 204 A.3d 1160 (2019); see also State v. Ayala, 183 Conn. App. 590, 594, 193 A.3d 710 (2018).¹³ fair trial; and (4) if subject to harmless error analysis, the state has failed to demonstrate harmlessness of the alleged constitutional violation beyond a reasonable doubt. In the absence of any one of these conditions, the defendant’s claim will fail.” (Emphasis in original; internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Washington, 186 Conn. App. 176, 193, 199 A.3d 44 (2018), cert. denied, 330 Conn. 958, 198 A.3d 585 (2019).

“We begin by noting that [b]ecause the claim presents an issue of law, our review is plenary.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Culver, 97 Conn. App. 332, 336, 904 A.2d 283, cert. denied, 280 Conn. 935, 909 A.2d 961 (2006). “Due process requires a fair hearing before a fair tribunal” Petrowski v. Norwich Free Academy, 199 Conn. 231, 235, 506 A.2d 139, appeal dismissed,

¹³ The defendant also argues that we should conclude that the fact that Judge Dewey, rather than Judge Alexander, decided the motion to correct an illegal sentence constituted plain error. Practice Book § 60-5 provides in relevant part: “The court shall not be bound to consider a claim unless it was distinctly raised at the trial or arose subsequent to the trial. The court may in the interests of justice notice plain error not brought to the attention of the trial court.”

We disagree with the defendant that this issue rises to the level of plain error. “[T]he plain error doctrine is reserved for truly extraordinary situations [in which] the existence of the error is so obvious that it affects the fairness and integrity of and public confidence in the judicial proceedings. . . . [I]n addition to examining the patent nature of the error, the reviewing court must examine that error for the grievousness of its consequences in order to determine whether reversal under the plain error doctrine is appropriate. A party cannot prevail under plain error unless it has demonstrated that the failure to grant relief will result in manifest injustice. . . . [Previously], we described the two-pronged nature of the plain error doctrine: [An appellant] cannot prevail under [the plain error doctrine] . . . unless he demonstrates that the claimed error is both so clear and so harmful that a failure to reverse the judgment would result in manifest injustice.”

192 Conn. App. 128

AUGUST, 2019

145

State v. Battle

479 U.S. 802, 107 S. Ct. 42, 93 L. Ed. 2d 5 (1986). “[D]ue process . . . is not a technical conception with a fixed content unrelated to time, place and circumstances. . . . [D]ue process is flexible and calls for such procedural protections as the particular situation demands.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Merchant v. State Ethics Commission, 53 Conn. App. 808, 826, 733 A.2d 287 (1999).

Practice Book § 43-22 provides: “The judicial authority may at any time correct an illegal sentence or other illegal disposition, or it may correct a sentence imposed in an illegal manner or any other disposition made in an illegal manner.” We note that the predecessor to § 43-22, Practice Book (1982) § 935, provided in relevant part: “The judicial authority who sentenced the defendant may, within ninety days, correct an illegal sentence . . . or . . . a sentence imposed in an illegal manner” (Emphasis added.) The rule was amended in 1982 to its present form, which does not limit the “judicial authority” empowered to correct an illegal sentence or a sentence imposed in an illegal manner to the sentencing court.¹⁴

The defendant has cited no appellate authority, and we are aware of none, holding that a defendant’s motion to correct an illegal sentence or a sentence imposed in an illegal manner must be heard and adjudicated by the particular judge who imposed the sentence. The defendant relies on a number of cases to support his assertion that Judge Alexander, as the sentencing judge, was the only judicial authority permitted to consider (Citation omitted; emphasis omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. McClain, 324 Conn. 802, 812, 155 A.3d 209 (2017).

¹⁴ The defendant argues that “[t]he Supreme Court, in State v. Pina, 185 Conn. 473, 481–82, [440 A.2d 962] (1981), interpreted ‘the judicial authority’ in the predecessor to Practice Book § 43-22, to mean ‘the sentencing court.’” We emphasize that Pina was published prior to the passage of the 1982 amendment to the Practice Book § 43-22, and, thus, does not support the defendant’s contention that a motion to correct must be decided by the particular sentencing judge.

146

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 128

State v. Battle

the motion to correct. See State v. Francis, 322 Conn. 247, 259–60, 140 A.3d 927 (2016) (stating that motion to correct illegal sentence “is directed to the sentencing court, which can entertain and resolve the challenge most expediently” [internal quotation marks omitted]), citing State v. Casiano, 282 Conn. 614, 624–25, 922 A.2d 1065 (2007); Cobham v. Commissioner of Correction, 258 Conn. 30, 39, 779 A.2d 80 (2001) (concluding that direct appeal or motion to correct illegal sentence is proper means to challenge illegal sentence, rather than raising challenge for first time in petition for writ of habeas corpus, and observing that “to correct an illegal sentence, only the trial court can: reconstruct the sentence to conform to its original intent or the plea agreement; eliminate a sentence previously imposed for a vacated conviction; or resentence a defendant if it is determined that the original sentence was illegal” [emphasis added]); State v. Raucci, 21 Conn. App. 557, 558, 565, 575 A.2d 234 (affirming judgment rendered by sentencing court reimposing sentence after granting defendant’s motion to correct illegal sentence), cert. denied, 215 Conn. 817, 576 A.2d 546 (1990). None of the cases cited by the defendant establishes that the sentencing judge must adjudicate a motion to correct an illegal sentence or a sentence imposed in an illegal manner; at most, the cases suggest that the sentencing judge may be the judicial authority who entertains such a motion.¹⁵

Due process does not mandate that a motion to correct an illegal sentence or a sentence imposed in an illegal manner be heard by the judge whom the defendant prefers or who has the greatest familiarity with the defendant. “Due process seeks to assure a defendant

¹⁵ In his dissenting opinion in State v. McGee, 175 Conn. App. 566, 597 n.11, 168 A.3d 495 (Bishop, J., dissenting), cert. denied, 327 Conn. 970, 173 A.3d 953 (2017), Judge Bishop observed that, in only one of fifteen cases that were selected at random for a survey, the judge who had heard and adjudicated a motion to correct an illegal sentence was the original sentencing judge.

192 Conn. App. 147

AUGUST, 2019

147

State v. Brown

a fair trial, not a perfect one.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Boutilier, 144 Conn. App. 867, 877 n.4, 73 A.3d 880, cert. denied, 310 Conn. 925, 77 A.3d 139 (2013). There is nothing before us that suggests that the defendant was deprived of a full and fair proceeding with regard to the motion to correct as a result of Judge Dewey, rather than Judge Alexander, adjudicating the motion to correct.

In sum, we conclude that the defendant did not suffer a due process violation when Judge Dewey, rather than Judge Alexander, heard and ruled on the motion to correct. Accordingly, the defendant’s claim fails under the third prong of Golding.

The form of the judgment is improper, the judgment dismissing the defendant’s motion to correct an illegal sentence is reversed, and the case is remanded with direction to render judgment denying the defendant’s motion.

In this opinion the other judges concurred.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT v. KENYA BROWN
(AC 41845)

DiPentima, C. J., and Alvord and Diana, Js.

Syllabus

The defendant, who had been convicted, on pleas of guilty, of the crimes of assault in the second degree and threatening in the first degree, appealed to this court from the judgment of the trial court denying his motion to correct an illegal sentence. In 2006, the defendant had pleaded guilty to assault in the second degree and was sentenced to eighteen months of imprisonment to run consecutively to a sentence he was serving for a 2003 conviction. In 2012, the defendant pleaded guilty to threatening in the first degree and was sentenced to fifteen months of imprisonment to run consecutively to his sentences for the 2003 and 2006 convictions. His motion to correct an illegal sentence challenged the sentences from his 2006 and 2012 convictions. On appeal, the defendant claimed that the statutes governing concurrent and consecutive sentences (§ 53a-37) and addressing the method of calculation of sentences (§ 53a-38) were ambiguous and contradictory in violation of his constitutional rights. Held:

State v. Brown

1. The defendant's claim that §§ 53a-37 and 53a-38 (b) were ambiguous and contradictory was unavailing: § 53a-37 clearly and unambiguously provides that, where a person is subject to an undischarged term of imprisonment and is sentenced to an additional term of imprisonment, the sentences imposed by the court shall run either concurrently or consecutively, as the court directs at the time of sentence, and § 53a-38 (b), which governs the calculation of terms of imprisonment, provides an unambiguous method of calculation to determine the total duration of terms of imprisonment for concurrent and consecutive sentences, and, therefore, §§ 53a-37 and 53a-38 were neither ambiguous nor contradictory as applied to the defendant's sentence; moreover, the court lacked jurisdiction to adjudicate the defendant's claim that his aggregated sentence was illegal because policy changes by the Department of Correction regarding the calculation and structure of prison sentences negatively impacted his ability to seek or obtain an early release, as the defendant did not attack the legality of the sentence imposed by the court during the sentencing proceeding but, rather, the legality of his sentence as subsequently calculated by the department, and for the court to have jurisdiction over a motion to correct an illegal sentence after the sentence has been executed, the sentencing proceeding itself must be the subject of the attack; accordingly, the court should have dismissed, rather than denied, that portion of the defendant's motion to correct.
2. The defendant could not prevail in his claim that § 53a-38 violated his constitutional rights to due process, to be free from double jeopardy, and to equal protection: the defendant's claim that his right to due process was violated because the aggregation of his sentences negatively impacted his eligibility for parole and risk reduction credits was not cognizable under a motion to correct an illegal sentence, and because the defendant did not receive multiple punishments for the same offense but, rather, received distinct sentences for separate offenses, his claim that the aggregation of his consecutive sentences adversely affected his eligibility for parole and risk reduction credits did not fall within the ambit of double jeopardy; moreover, the defendant's claim that § 53a-38 (b) (2) violated his right to equal protection was unavailing, as our Supreme Court has expressly stated that prisoners do not constitute a suspect class, and § 53a-38 (b) (2), which contains a plausible policy reason for the classification, meets the rational basis threshold.

Argued April 23—officially released August 27, 2019

Procedural History

Substitute information in the first case, charging the defendant with the crime of assault in the second degree, and two-part substitute information, in the second case, charging the defendant with the crime of

192 Conn. App. 147

AUGUST, 2019

149

State v. Brown

threatening in the first degree, brought to the Superior Court in the judicial district of Danbury, where the defendant was presented to the court, Marano, J., on a plea of guilty as to the crime of assault in the second degree; judgment of guilty in accordance with the plea; thereafter, the defendant was presented to the court, Blawie, J., on a plea of guilty as to the crime of threatening in the first degree; judgment of guilty in accordance with the plea; subsequently, the court, Welch, J., denied the defendant's motion to correct an illegal sentence, and the defendant appealed to this court. Improper form of judgment; affirmed in part; judgment directed in part.

Kenya O. Brown, self-represented, the appellant (defendant).

Bruce R. Lockwood, supervisory assistant state's attorney, with whom, on the brief, were Stephen J. Sedensky III, state's attorney, and Edward L. Miller, assistant state's attorney, for the appellee (state).

Opinion

PER CURIAM. The self-represented defendant, Kenya Brown, appeals from the trial court's denial of his motion to correct an illegal sentence. On appeal, the defendant claims that (1) General Statutes §§ 53a-37¹

¹ General Statutes § 53a-37 provides: "When multiple sentences of imprisonment are imposed on a person at the same time, or when a person who is subject to any undischarged term of imprisonment imposed at a previous time by a court of this state is sentenced to an additional term of imprisonment, the sentence or sentences imposed by the court shall run either concurrently or consecutively with respect to each other and to the undischarged term or terms in such manner as the court directs at the time of sentence. The court shall state whether the respective maxima and minima shall run concurrently or consecutively with respect to each other, and shall state in conclusion the effective sentence imposed. When a person is sentenced for two or more counts each constituting a separate offense, the court may order that the term of imprisonment for the second and subsequent counts be for a fixed number of years each. The court in such cases shall not set any minimum term of imprisonment except under the first count, and the fixed number of years imposed for the second and subsequent

150

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 147

State v. Brown

and 53a-38² are ambiguous and contradictory, and (2) § 53a-38 is unconstitutional because it violates his constitutional rights to due process, to be free from double jeopardy, and to equal protection. We reverse the judgment of the trial court only as it relates to the portion of the defendant's motion to correct that advances arguments that do not implicate the sentencing proceeding itself. The court should have dismissed, rather than denied, this portion of the motion. We affirm the judgment of the trial court in all other respects.

The following facts are relevant on appeal. In 2003, the defendant pleaded guilty to attempt to commit murder in violation of General Statutes §§ 53a-49 and 53a-54a, and robbery in the first degree in violation of General Statutes § 53a-134 (a) (2). The defendant was sentenced to a total effective term of twenty years imprisonment. In 2006, in connection with the assault of a fellow inmate, the defendant pleaded guilty to assault in the second degree in violation of General Statutes § 53a-60 (a) (2), and was sentenced to a term of eighteen months of imprisonment to run consecutively to the sentence he was serving for the 2003 convictions. In 2012, in connection with threats the defendant had made in a letter to a judge, the defendant pleaded guilty to threatening in the first degree in violation of General Statutes § 53a-61aa, and was sentenced to a term of fifteen months of imprisonment to run consecutively to his sentences for the 2003 and 2006 convictions.

counts shall be added to the maximum term imposed by the court on the first count.”

² General Statutes § 53a-38 (b) provides: “A definite sentence of imprisonment commences when the prisoner is received in the custody to which he was sentenced. Where a person is under more than one definite sentence, the sentences shall be calculated as follows: (1) If the sentences run concurrently, the terms merge in and are satisfied by discharge of the term which has the longest term to run; (2) if the sentences run consecutively, the terms are added to arrive at an aggregate term and are satisfied by discharge of such aggregate term.”

192 Conn. App. 147

AUGUST, 2019

151

State v. Brown

On January 10, 2018, the self-represented defendant filed a motion to correct an illegal sentence challenging the sentences from his 2006 and 2012 convictions.³ The defendant argued that § 53a-37, governing concurrent and consecutive sentences, and § 53a-38, addressing the method of calculation for those sentences, were ambiguous and contradictory, and violated his constitutional rights to due process, to be free from double jeopardy, and to equal protection. Pursuant to State v. Casiano, 282 Conn. 614, 922 A.2d 1065 (2007), Assistant Public Defender Jenna Carriero reviewed the defendant's motion and reported in writing to the court, Welch, J., that “no sound basis exist[ed] for either the correction of the defendant's sentence in the manner he outline[d] in his motion, or an appeal of the trial court's denial of that motion.” At a hearing on April 27, 2018, the court accepted Attorney Carriero's report and denied the defendant's motion to correct an illegal sentence. This appeal followed.

On appeal, the defendant claims the court erred in denying his motion to correct an illegal sentence. The defendant renews his argument that, as applied to his sentences, §§ 53a-37 and 53a-38 are ambiguous and contradictory and that § 53a-38 violated his constitutional rights to due process, to be free from double jeopardy, and to equal protection. We disagree with the defendant.

We begin by setting forth our standard of review. “A motion to correct an illegal sentence under Practice Book § 43-22 constitutes a narrow exception to the general rule that, once a defendant's sentence has begun, the authority of the sentencing court to modify that sentence terminates.” State v. Casiano, supra, 282 Conn. 624. Practice Book § 43-22 states, “[t]he judicial

³ In 2016, the defendant filed a motion to correct an illegal sentence, which was subsequently denied. This prior motion is not the subject of this appeal.

152

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 147

State v. Brown

authority may at any time correct an illegal sentence or other illegal disposition, or it may correct a sentence imposed in an illegal manner or any other disposition made in an illegal manner.” “An illegal sentence . . . either exceeds the relevant statutory maximum limits, violates a defendant’s right against double jeopardy, is ambiguous, or is internally contradictory. . . . Sentences imposed in an illegal manner have been defined as being within the relevant statutory limits but . . . imposed in a way which violates [a] defendant’s right . . . to be addressed personally at sentencing and to speak in mitigation of punishment . . . or his right to be sentenced by a judge relying on accurate information or considerations solely on the record, or his right that the government keep its plea agreement promises [These examples are not exhaustive and will evolve to encompass rights or procedures] mandated by state law that are intended to ensure fundamental fairness in sentencing, which, if not followed, could render a sentence invalid.” (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Parker, 295 Conn. 825, 839–40, 992 A.2d 1103 (2010). Because the defendant’s claims raise questions of statutory interpretation and the constitutionality of statutes, our review is plenary. See State v. Meadows, 185 Conn. App. 287, 302–303, 197 A.3d 464 (constitutionality of statutes subject to plenary review), cert. granted on other grounds, 330 Conn. 947, 196 A.3d 327 (2018); State v. Holliday, 118 Conn. App. 35, 39, 982 A.2d 268 (2009) (statutory interpretation subject to plenary review), cert. denied, 295 Conn. 909, 989 A.2d 605 (2010).

I

The defendant first claims that §§ 53a-37 and 53a-38 are “ambiguous and contradictory.” Essentially, the defendant’s argument on appeal is that because his 2006 and 2012 sentences run consecutively, they adversely affected his original 2003 plea agreement and, therefore,

192 Conn. App. 147

AUGUST, 2019

153

State v. Brown

he was not provided fair notice that his ability to seek an early release would be altered accordingly. The state responds that the plain language of the two statutes is neither ambiguous nor contradictory and that the Department of Correction's (department) "changing policies regarding the calculation and structure of prison sentences" is not a cognizable claim on a motion to correct an illegal sentence. We agree with the state.

"When construing a statute, [o]ur fundamental objective is to ascertain and give effect to the apparent intent of the legislature. . . . In other words, we seek to determine, in a reasoned manner, the meaning of the statutory language as applied to the facts of [the] case, including the question of whether the language actually does apply. . . . In seeking to determine that meaning [General Statutes] § 1-2z directs us first to consider the text of the statute itself and its relationship to other statutes. If, after examining such text and considering such relationship, the meaning of such text is plain and unambiguous and does not yield absurd or unworkable results, extratextual evidence of the meaning of the statute shall not be considered." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Smith v. Rudolph, 330 Conn. 138, 143, 191 A.3d 992 (2018).

Accordingly, we now turn to the language of §§ 53a-37 and 53a-38. Section 53a-37 provides: "When multiple sentences of imprisonment are imposed on a person at the same time, or when a person who is subject to any undischarged term of imprisonment imposed at a previous time by a court of this state is sentenced to an additional term of imprisonment, the sentence or sentences imposed by the court shall run either concurrently or consecutively with respect to each other and to the undischarged term or terms in such manner as the court directs at the time of sentence. The court shall state whether the respective maxima and minima shall run concurrently or consecutively with respect to each other, and shall state in conclusion the effective sentence imposed. When a person is sentenced for two or more counts each constituting a separate offense, the court may order that the term of imprisonment for the second and subsequent counts be for a fixed number of years each. The court in such cases shall not set any minimum term of imprisonment except under the first count, and the fixed number of years imposed for the second and subsequent counts shall be added to the maximum term imposed by the court on the first count.” (Emphasis added.) Additionally, § 53a-38 (b), which governs the calculation of terms of imprisonment, provides: “A definite sentence of imprisonment commences when the prisoner is received in the custody to which he was sentenced. Where a person is under more than one definite sentence, the sentences shall be calculated as follows: (1) If the sentences run concurrently, the terms merge in and are satisfied by discharge of the term which has the longest term to run; (2) if the sentences run consecutively, the terms are added to arrive at an aggregate term and are satisfied by discharge of such aggregate term.” (Emphasis added.)

Taken together, §§ 53a-37 and 53a-38 (b) are neither ambiguous nor contradictory. The relevant portion of § 53a-37 specifically addresses situations, like the defendant’s, where a person is subject to an undischarged term of imprisonment and is subsequently sentenced to an additional term of imprisonment. The plain language of § 53a-37 clearly and unambiguously provides that, in such circumstances, the sentences imposed by the court shall run either concurrently or consecutively, as the court directs at the time of sentence. Additionally, § 53a-38 (b) provides an unambiguous method of calculation to determine the total duration for terms of imprisonment where sentences run concurrently and where sentences run consecutively. Section 53a-38 (b) (2) provides that “if the sentences run consecutively, the terms are added to arrive at

192 Conn. App. 147

AUGUST, 2019

155

State v. Brown

an aggregate term and are satisfied by the discharge of such aggregate term.” The defendant’s term of imprisonment reflects this calculation. Attorney Carriero indicated that the defendant was “currently serving an aggregate sentence of 20 years [and] 33 months.” The defendant was sentenced to 20 years of imprisonment in 2003, 18 months of imprisonment in 2006, and 15 months of imprisonment in 2012, each sentence running consecutively. Adding the terms of these sentences together, as required under § 53a-38 (b) (2), equals an aggregate term of 20 years and 33 months. We conclude that §§ 53a-37 and 53a-38 are neither ambiguous nor contradictory as applied to the defendant’s sentence.

As to the defendant’s claim that his aggregated sentence is illegal because the department’s changing policies regarding the calculation and structure of prison sentences have negatively impacted his ability to seek or obtain an early release, the court lacked jurisdiction. In order for the court to have jurisdiction over a motion to correct an illegal sentence after the sentence has been executed, the sentencing proceeding itself must be the subject of attack. See State v. Casiano, supra, 282 Conn. 625. Because the defendant does not attack the legality of the sentence imposed by the court during the sentencing proceeding but, rather, the legality of his sentence as subsequently calculated by the department, his claim is not cognizable under a motion to correct an illegal sentence. State v. Carmona 104 Conn. App. 828, 832–33, 936 A.2d 243 (2007), cert. denied, 286 Conn. 919, 946 A.2d 1249 (2008). Accordingly, the court should have dismissed this portion of the defendant’s claim.

II

We turn now to the defendant’s claims that § 53a-38 (b) (2) violated his constitutional rights to due process, to be free from double jeopardy, and to equal protection. The state argues that each of these claims are meritless and not cognizable on a motion to correct an illegal sentence. We agree with the state.

156 AUGUST, 2019 192 Conn. App. 147

State v. Brown

“We begin with the well established proposition that [b]ecause a validly enacted statute carries with it a strong presumption of constitutionality, those who challenge its constitutionality must sustain the heavy burden of proving its unconstitutionality beyond a reasonable doubt. . . . In construing a statute, moreover, we will search for an effective and constitutional construction that reasonably accords with the legislature’s underlying intent. . . . We also note that, [w]hen a question of constitutionality is raised, courts must approach it with caution, examine it with care, and sustain the legislation unless its invalidity is clear.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Evans, 329 Conn. 770, 809, 189 A.3d 1184 (2018), cert. denied, U.S. , 139 S. Ct. 1304, 203 L. Ed. 2d 425 (2019).

The basis of the defendant’s due process claim is that the aggregation of his 2003, 2006, and 2012 sentences pursuant to § 53a-38 (b) (2), violated his right to due process because it negatively impacted his eligibility for parole and risk reduction credits and, thereby, prevented the state from keeping its plea promises and deprived the defendant of fair notice “of these alterations that take place after the sentence” We reject the defendant’s argument. As previously noted in part I of this opinion, the claims raised by the defendant concerning his sentence as subsequently calculated by the department are not cognizable under a motion to correct an illegal sentence. See State v. Carmona, supra, 104 Conn. App. 832–33.⁴

⁴ Although this determination is dispositive of the defendant’s due process claim, we note that the defendant does not have a cognizable liberty interest in either his parole eligibility or his risk reduction credits. See Perez v. Commissioner of Correction, 326 Conn. 357, 371–72, 163 A.3d 597 (2017) (“This court previously has held that parole eligibility under [General Statutes] § 54-125a does not constitute a cognizable liberty interest sufficient to invoke habeas jurisdiction. . . . It follows that if an inmate has no vested liberty interest in the granting of parole, then the timing of when the board

192 Conn. App. 147

AUGUST, 2019

157

State v. Brown

The defendant next claims that § 53a-38 (b) (2) violated his right against double jeopardy because the aggregation of his consecutive sentences negatively impacted his eligibility for parole and risk reduction credits and, thereby, resulted in multiple punishments. The state argues that the defendant's claim is meritless because the constitutional guarantee against double jeopardy prohibits multiple punishments for the same offense and does not apply where a defendant's consecutive sentences are aggregated for purposes of determining parole eligibility. We agree with the state.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, in Alessi v. Quinlan, 711 F.2d 497, 501 (2d Cir. 1983), explained that “[a] denial of parole is a decision to withhold early release from the confinement component of a sentence. It is neither the imposition nor the increase of a sentence, and it is not punishment for purposes of the Double Jeopardy Clause, even though the [United States Parole] Commission's decision to set a later rather than an earlier parole release date may sometimes result in a longer period of confinement than might ultimately result from an increase in a court-imposed sentence. Nevertheless it is the sentence that is limited by the Double Jeopardy Clause, not the administrative decision to grant early release from confinement.” This reasoning is applicable in the present case because the defendant had not received multiple punishments for the same offense but, rather, received three distinct sentences in 2003, 2006, and 2012 for separate offenses. The defendant's claim that the aggregation of these consecutive sentences adversely affected his eligibility for parole and risk reduction credits does not, therefore, fall within the ambit of double jeopardy.

could, in its discretion, grant parole does not rise to the level of a vested liberty interest either. . . . [T]he award of risk reduction credit itself is at the discretion of the respondent.” [Citations omitted; emphasis in original; footnote omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.]

158

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 147

State v. Brown

The defendant's last claim on appeal is that § 53a-38 (b) (2) violated his right to equal protection under the law. The defendant claims that prisoners sentenced to consecutive sentences are members of a "suspect class." We disagree. Our Supreme Court has expressly stated that "prisoners do not constitute a suspect class." Perez v. Commissioner of Correction, 326 Conn. 357, 384, 163 A.3d 597 (2017). Accordingly, the defendant's equal protection claim is subject to rational basis review. See State v. Wright, 246 Conn. 132, 139, 716 A.2d 870 (1998) ("The equal protection clause does not require absolute equality or precisely equal advantages [between such similarly situated persons] To determine whether a particular classification violates the guarantees of equal protection, the court must consider the character of the classification Where . . . the classification at issue neither impinges upon a fundamental right nor affects a suspect group it will withstand constitutional attack if the distinction is founded on a rational basis." [Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.]) "Rational basis review is satisfied so long as there is a plausible policy reason for the classification [I]t is irrelevant whether the conceivable basis for the challenged distinction actually motivated the legislature." (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 139–40. We conclude that § 53a-38 (b) (2), which clearly contains a plausible policy reason for the classification, meets the rational basis threshold and therefore withstands the defendant's constitutional challenge on equal protection grounds.

The form of the judgment is improper, the judgment denying the defendant's motion to correct an illegal sentence is reversed in part and the case is remanded with direction to dismiss the portion of the defendant's motion to correct an illegal sentence that advances arguments that do not implicate the sentencing proceeding itself; the judgment is affirmed in all other respects.

192 Conn. App. 159

AUGUST, 2019

159

Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Fratarcangeli

WELLS FARGO BANK, N.A. v. NICOLE M.
FRATARCANGELI ET AL.
(AC 41593)

DiPentima, C. J., and Moll and Norcott, Js.

Syllabus

The named defendant, F, who had executed a mortgage on certain real property, appealed to this court from the judgment of strict foreclosure rendered in favor of the substitute plaintiff, M Co. On appeal, F claimed, inter alia, that the trial court erred in striking her special defenses of illegal attestation of the mortgage deed and unclean hands as to the illegal attestation of the mortgage deed, and concluded that the validating statute (§ 47-36aa) rendered the mortgage deed valid and enforceable. In her special defenses, F had claimed, inter alia, that S, an agent of W Co., the predecessor in interest to M Co., breached her oath of office as a public official in her capacity as a notary public and committed acts of fraud in the execution of the mortgage deed, rendering the deed invalid and unenforceable. Specifically, F claimed that S did not notarize the mortgage deed while at F's home and did not have a second attesting witness as required by statute (§ 47-5 [a]), and that S's husband was the second attesting witness to the mortgage deed outside F's presence and without her knowledge. Held:

1. The trial court properly granted M Co.'s motion to strike F's special defense of illegal attestation of the mortgage deed as legally insufficient: the plain and unambiguous language of § 47-36aa (a) (2) provides that any mortgage containing a conveyancing defect as a result of, inter alia, being attested by one witness only is as valid as if it had been executed without the defect, unless an action challenging the validity of the mortgage was commenced and a notice of lis pendens was recorded within two years after the mortgage was recorded, which did not occur here, and, therefore, the alleged witness attestation defect was automatically cured by the validating act; moreover, there was no language in § 47-36aa (a) (2) that limits its applicability or otherwise carves out a fraud exception for instances where it is alleged that the lack of a valid second attesting witness resulted from a fraudulent act.
2. The trial court properly granted M Co.'s motion to strike F's special defense of unclean hands as to the attestation of the mortgage deed, as the witnessing defect in the mortgage deed was cured by operation of § 47-36aa (a) (2), and M Co.'s claim of foreclosure neither depended on nor was inseparably connected with S's alleged fraudulent conduct; moreover, F did not allege that the conduct claimed to be unclean was done directly against her interests, and, therefore, the unclean hands doctrine was not available to F on the basis of the allegations made in support of her second special defense.

Argued March 18—officially released August 27, 2019

160

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 159

Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Fratarcangeli

Procedural History

Action to foreclose a mortgage on certain real property of the named defendant et al., and for other relief, brought to the Superior Court in the judicial district of Fairfield, where the defendant JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. was defaulted for failure to appear; thereafter, MTGLQ Investors, LP, was substituted as the plaintiff; subsequently, the named defendant filed an answer and special defenses; thereafter, the court, Hon. Alfred J. Jennings, Jr., judge trial referee, granted in part the substitute plaintiff's motion to strike the named defendant's special defenses, and the named defendant appealed to this court, which dismissed the appeal; subsequently, the matter was tried to the court, Hon. George N. Thim, judge trial referee; judgment of strict foreclosure, from which the named defendant appealed to this court. Affirmed.

Gary L. Seymour, for the appellant (named defendant).

Todd H. Lampert, with whom, on the brief, was Arthur C. Zinn, for the appellee (substitute plaintiff).

Opinion

MOLL, J. The defendant, Nicole M. Fratarcangeli,¹ appeals from the judgment of strict foreclosure rendered after a court trial in favor of the substitute plaintiff, MTGLQ Investors, LP. On appeal, the defendant claims that the court erred when it granted the substitute plaintiff's motion to strike as to her first and second special defenses of (1) illegal attestation of the mortgage deed and (2) unclean hands as to the attestation of the mortgage deed. We disagree and, accordingly, affirm the judgment of the trial court.

¹ The complaint also named JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A., as a defendant, but it was defaulted for failure to appear and is not participating in this appeal. Accordingly, we refer to Nicole M. Fratarcangeli as the defendant.

192 Conn. App. 159

AUGUST, 2019

161

Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Fratarcangeli

The following facts and procedural history are relevant to our resolution of the defendant's claims. In its complaint, the original plaintiff, Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., alleged the following relevant facts. On March 21, 2005, the defendant executed a promissory note, in the principal amount of $535,000, in favor of World Savings Bank, FSB (World Savings Bank). The note was secured by a mortgage executed by the defendant on real property located at 370 Wilson Road in Easton. On April 4, 2005, the mortgage deed was recorded on the Easton land records. Thereafter, the original plaintiff acquired Wachovia Mortgage, FSB, formerly known as World Savings Bank. Beginning in July, 2009, and each and every month thereafter, the defendant failed to make payments on the note. On or before April 21, 2015, the original plaintiff became the party entitled to collect the debt evidenced by the note and to enforce the mortgage. In connection with the defendant's default on the note, the original plaintiff exercised its option to declare the entire balance of the note due and payable. In July, 2016, the original plaintiff commenced this foreclosure action against the defendant.

On December 2, 2016, the original plaintiff filed a motion for a judgment of strict foreclosure. On March 2, 2017, the original plaintiff filed a motion to substitute party plaintiff, as well as an accompanying memorandum of law in support thereof and an appended copy of its assignment of the mortgage to the substitute plaintiff. On March 20, 2017, the court granted the motion to substitute.

On May 17, 2017, the defendant filed an answer and eight special defenses.² In support of her first and second special defenses, the defendant alleged the following facts. World Savings Bank procured and paid for,

² The defendant asserted the following special defenses: (1) illegal attestation of the mortgage deed (first special defense); (2) unclean hands as to the attestation of the mortgage deed (second special defense); (3) unconscionability (third special defense); (4) equitable estoppel (fifth special defense);

162

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 159

Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Fratarcangeli

as part of the closing costs, the services of a notary public, Kathleen Salerno, who conducted the closing at the defendant's home in Easton. While at the defendant's home, Salerno had the defendant execute all of the necessary closing documents, including the mortgage deed, but Salerno did not notarize those documents while at the defendant's home and did not request or provide a second attesting witness to the mortgage deed as required by General Statutes § 47-5 (a).³ Rather, Salerno subsequently had her husband "witness" the defendant's signature, outside of the defendant's presence and without the defendant's knowledge.

For her first special defense of illegal attestation of the mortgage deed, the defendant alleged that, on the basis of the foregoing factual allegations, Salerno, as an agent of World Savings Bank and a public official in her capacity as a notary public, breached her oath of office and committed acts of fraud in the execution of the mortgage deed, rendering the deed invalid and unenforceable. For her second special defense of unclean hands, relying on the same factual allegations, the defendant claimed that Salerno, as an agent of World Savings Bank, supplied a false witness in an effort to validate the mortgage and that such action constituted "a blatant dishonest attempt to validate an invalid mortgage" The remaining special defenses are not at issue in this appeal.

(5) statute of limitations (sixth special defense); (6) fraud as to the loan modification process (seventh special defense); (7) unclean hands as to the loan modification process (eighth special defense); and (8) equitable estoppel as to the loan modification process (ninth special defense). The defendant did not plead a fourth special defense.

³ As a result of a typographical error, the special defense cites General Statutes § 47-5a, instead of General Statutes § 47-5 (a), which provides in relevant part: "All conveyances of land shall be: (1) In writing; (2) if the grantor is a natural person, subscribed, with or without a seal, by the grantor with his own hand . . . and (4) attested to by two witnesses with their own hands."

192 Conn. App. 159

AUGUST, 2019

163

Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Fratarcangeli

On May 31, 2017, the substitute plaintiff filed a motion to strike the defendant's special defenses, including the first and second special defenses, contesting the legal sufficiency thereof. On July 12 and 13, 2017, respectively, the defendant filed an objection and a memorandum of law in opposition to the motion to strike. On November 21, 2017, the court, inter alia, granted the substitute plaintiff's motion to strike as to the defendant's first and second special defenses.⁴ With respect to the first special defense of illegal attestation of the mortgage deed, the court granted the motion on two grounds: (1) the defect of one invalid witness was cured by operation of General Statutes § 47-36aa (validating act); and (2) a defect in a mortgage cannot be used to defeat a foreclosure action as between the original mortgagor and mortgagee, as a mortgage deed that is not properly witnessed and acknowledged is nevertheless valid as between the parties to the instrument.⁵ As to the defendant's second special defense of unclean hands, the court granted the motion to strike on the ground that the defect of one invalid witness was validated by § 47-36aa (a) (2), and Salerno's alleged fraudulent misconduct played no role in aiding the substitute

⁴ In addition, the court denied the motion as to the third, fifth, seventh, eighth, and ninth special defenses and granted the motion as to the sixth special defense without prejudice to the defendant's right to plead a statute of limitations defense in response to any motion for a deficiency judgment that may have been filed later in the case.

On December 7, 2017, the defendant appealed from the court's November 21, 2017 order insofar as it granted the substitute plaintiff's motion to strike as to her first and second special defenses. On December 19, 2017, the substitute plaintiff filed a motion to dismiss the appeal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and to sanction the defendant on the ground that her appeal was frivolous. On January 18, 2018, this court granted the substitute plaintiff's motion to dismiss on the basis that no final judgment had been rendered but denied its request for sanctions.

⁵ In striking the defendant's first special defense, the court also rejected the defendant's contention that Salerno's failure to notarize the necessary closing documents, including the mortgage deed, while at the defendant's home rendered the mortgage deed invalid and unenforceable. On appeal, the defendant does not assert any claim with respect to that portion of the court's decision.

164

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 159

Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Fratarcangeli

plaintiff's claim for foreclosure. On December 20, 2017, the substitute plaintiff filed a reply to the defendant's non-stricken special defenses.

On April 12, 2018, following a trial to the court, the court rendered a judgment of strict foreclosure in favor of the substitute plaintiff. This appeal followed. Additional facts and procedural history will be provided as necessary.

At the outset, we note the standard of review and legal principles that apply to the defendant's claims. "Because a motion to strike challenges the legal sufficiency of a pleading and, consequently, requires no factual findings by the trial court, our review of the court's ruling on [a motion to strike] is plenary. . . . A party wanting to contest the legal sufficiency of a special defense may do so by filing a motion to strike. The purpose of a special defense is to plead facts that are consistent with the allegations of the complaint but demonstrate, nonetheless, that the plaintiff has no cause of action. . . . In ruling on a motion to strike, the court must accept as true the facts alleged in the special defenses and construe them in the manner most favorable to sustaining their legal sufficiency." (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Barasso v. Rear Still Hill Road, LLC, 64 Conn. App. 9, 12–13, 779 A.2d 198 (2001). "In determining whether a motion to strike should be granted, the sole question is whether, if the facts alleged are taken to be true, the allegations provide a cause of action or a defense." County Federal Savings & Loan Assn. v. Eastern Associates, 3 Conn. App. 582, 585, 491 A.2d 401 (1985). We now address the defendant's claims in turn.

I

The defendant first claims that the court erred in striking her first special defense of illegal attestation of the mortgage deed on the basis that § 47-36aa rendered the mortgage deed valid and enforceable despite

192 Conn. App. 159

AUGUST, 2019

165

Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Fratarcangeli

Salerno's alleged fraudulent use of her husband as a false witness.⁶ Specifically, without relying on any specific language of § 47-36aa or any underlying legislative history, the defendant argues that "it is clear that the legislature never intended in enacting [§] 47-36aa to validate such fraudulent acts." In response, the substitute plaintiff contends that the relevant provisions of § 47-36aa (a) are clear and unambiguous and provide that, unless an action challenging the validity of a mortgage on the basis of one of the conveyancing defects or omissions enumerated in § 47-36aa (a) is commenced and a notice of lis pendens is recorded on the land records within two years after the mortgage is recorded, such mortgage is as valid as if it had been executed without the defect or omission. Therefore, the substitute plaintiff argues, in the absence of such procedure being followed in the present case, the alleged witnessing defect is cured by operation of § 47-36aa (a). We agree with the substitute plaintiff.

We briefly address the applicable standard of review. Resolution of the defendant's claims on appeal requires us to determine whether § 47-36aa (a) applies to cure an attesting witness defect or omission in the context of an allegation of fraud in the execution of a mortgage deed. Because statutory interpretation involves a question of law, our review is plenary. Bell Atlantic NYNEX Mobile, Inc. v. Commissioner of Revenue Services, 273 Conn. 240, 249, 869 A.2d 611 (2005).

⁶ Additionally, the defendant sets forth a separate claim on appeal that the court erroneously struck her first special defense by finding that the mortgage deed is enforceable between the parties on the basis of case law applicable to a defect, omission, and/or mistake, as opposed to an intentional act, in the execution of a mortgage deed. Because the defendant does not analyze, or even cite, any of the case law that she claims was misapplied, we do not address this separate claim further. See, e.g., Citibank, N.A. v. Stein, 186 Conn. App. 224, 248, 199 A.3d 57 (2018) (appellate courts are not required to review issues that have been improperly presented through an inadequate brief), cert. denied, 331 Conn. 903, 202 A.3d 373 (2019).

166

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 159

Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Fratarcangeli

“When construing a statute, [o]ur fundamental objective is to ascertain and give effect to the apparent intent of the legislature. . . . In other words, we seek to determine, in a reasoned manner, the meaning of the statutory language as applied to the facts of [the] case, including the question of whether the language actually does apply. . . . In seeking to determine that meaning, General Statutes § 1-2z directs us first to consider the text of the statute itself and its relationship to other statutes. If, after examining such text and considering such relationship, the meaning of such text is plain and unambiguous and does not yield absurd or unworkable results, extratextual evidence of the meaning of the statute shall not be considered. . . . Importantly, ambiguity exists only if the statutory language at issue is susceptible to more than one plausible interpretation.” (Footnote added; internal quotation marks omitted.) Connecticut Housing Finance Authority v. Alfaro, 328 Conn. 134, 141–42, 176 A.3d 1146 (2018).

We begin with the language of § 47-5, entitled in part “Requirements re conveyances of land,” which provides in relevant part: “(a) All conveyances of land shall be: (1) In writing; (2) if the grantor is a natural person, subscribed, with or without a seal, by the grantor with his own hand . . . and (4) attested to by two witnesses with their own hands.” (Emphasis added.) In the present case, the parties do not dispute that the mortgage deed was not “attested to by two witnesses” in accordance with § 47-5 (a) (4). That is, there is no dispute that (1) the defendant signed the note and the mortgage deed, (2) Salerno was a valid attesting witness to the mortgage deed, and (3) Salerno’s husband was not a valid attesting witness to the mortgage deed.

We turn, therefore, to the language of the validating act, § 47-36aa, entitled “Validations re conveyancing defects of instrument recorded after January 1, 1997, insubstantial defects, defects re power of attorney,

192 Conn. App. 159

AUGUST, 2019

167

Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Fratarcangeli

defects re conveyance by fiduciary.” Section 47-36aa provides in relevant part: “(a) Conveyancing defects. Any deed, mortgage . . . or other instrument made for the purpose of conveying, leasing, mortgaging or affecting any interest in real property in this state recorded after January 1, 1997, which instrument contains any one or more of the following defects or omissions is as valid as if it had been executed without the defect or omission unless an action challenging the validity of that instrument is commenced and a notice of lis pendens is recorded in the land records of the town or towns where the instrument is recorded within two years after the instrument is recorded . . . (2) The instrument is attested by one witness only or by no witnesses” As stated by our Supreme Court, the validating act “provides a mechanism for curing certain defects in instruments affecting interests in real property, including defective acknowledgements or a lack of attesting witnesses [T]hese defects are cured automatically by statute, in the absence of a timely filed action specifically challenging the validity of the instrument and a timely filed lis pendens” Alexson v. Foss, 276 Conn. 599, 607–608, 887 A.2d 872 (2006).

The express language of § 47-36aa (a) (2) provides, inter alia, that any mortgage containing a conveyancing defect as a result of being “attested by one witness only or by no witnesses” is “as valid as if it had been executed without the defect or omission” unless an action challenging the validity of the mortgage is commenced and a notice of lis pendens is recorded within two years after the mortgage is recorded. There is no language in § 47-36aa (a) that limits the applicability of subdivision (2) or otherwise carves out a fraud exception for instances where it is alleged that the lack of a valid second attesting witness resulted from a fraudulent act. We conclude that the meaning of the validating act with

168

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 159

Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Fratarcangeli

regard to the question before us is plain and unambiguous and, therefore, our inquiry as to such meaning ends. See In re Elianah T.-T., 326 Conn. 614, 624, 165 A.3d 1236 (2017) (“[i]f the legislature’s intent is clear from the statute’s plain and unambiguous language, our inquiry ends”). Simply put, § 47-36aa does not contain a fraud exception, and we do not write one into the statute. We further note that when the legislature wants to carve out a fraud exception, it knows how to do so. See, e.g., General Statutes § 12-415 (f) (“[e]xcept in the case of fraud . . . every notice of a deficiency assessment shall be mailed within three years after the last day of the month following the period for which the amount is proposed to be assessed or within three years after the return is filed, whichever period expires later” [emphasis added]).

Applying the language of § 47-36aa (a) (2) to the present case, we conclude that, in the absence of a timely filed action specifically challenging the validity of the mortgage at issue on the basis of an enumerated conveyancing defect, namely, the lack of a valid second witness as otherwise required by § 47-5 (a),⁷ the validating act automatically cured such defect or omission. Cf. Collard & Roe, P.C. v. Klein, 87 Conn. App. 337, 350, 865 A.2d 500 (affirming trial court’s determination that § 47-36aa did not cure invalidity of deed not signed by two witnesses because plaintiff brought action challenging conveyance and filed notice of lis pendens within statutory period), cert. denied, 274 Conn. 904, 876 A.2d 13 (2005); see also Lupoli v. Lupoli, 38 Conn. App. 639, 642–43, 662 A.2d 809 (special validating act cured any imperfection in execution of deed relating to second attesting witness), cert. denied, 235 Conn.

⁷ It is undisputed that the defendant did not commence an action to challenge the validity of the mortgage based on the attesting witness defect within two years after the mortgage instrument was recorded (or at any other time).

192 Conn. App. 159

AUGUST, 2019

169

Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Fratarcangeli

907, 665 A.2d 902 (1995). In this connection, we make clear that § 47-36aa (a) (2) does not render valid the invalid signature of Salerno's husband; rather, § 47-36aa (a) (2) cures the lack of a valid second witness. In light of the foregoing, and construing the factual allegations in a manner most favorable to the defendant, we conclude that the defendant failed to plead a legally sufficient special defense, and the trial court properly granted the substitute plaintiff's motion to strike as to the defendant's first special defense.

II

The defendant next claims that the trial court erred in striking her second special defense of unclean hands as to the attestation of the mortgage. The substitute plaintiff argues, to the contrary, that the court properly struck the defendant's second special defense on the basis that the substitute plaintiff's claim of foreclosure neither depended on nor was inseparably connected with the alleged prior fraud of Salerno. We agree with the substitute plaintiff.

"[W]e note that an action to foreclose a mortgage is an equitable proceeding. . . . It is a fundamental principle of equity jurisprudence that for a complainant to show that he is entitled to the benefit of equity he must establish that he comes into court with clean hands. . . . The clean hands doctrine is applied not for the protection of the parties but for the protection of the court. . . . It is applied not by way of punishment but on considerations that make for the advancement of right and justice. . . . Because the doctrine of unclean hands exists to safeguard the integrity of the court . . . [w]here a plaintiff's claim grows out of or depends upon or is inseparably connected with his own prior fraud, a court of equity will, in general, deny him any relief, and will leave him to whatever remedies and defenses

170

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 159

Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Fratarcangeli

at law he may have. . . . Though an obligation be indirectly connected with an illegal transaction, it will not thereby be barred from enforcement, if the plaintiff does not require the aid of the illegal transaction to make out his case. . . . In addition, the conduct alleged to be unclean must have been done directly against the interests of the party seeking to invoke the doctrine, rather than the interests of a third party.” (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Thompson v. Orcutt, 257 Conn. 301, 310–11, 777 A.2d 670 (2001).

Mindful of these principles, and construing the factual allegations in a manner most favorable to the defendant, we conclude that the trial court properly granted the substitute plaintiff’s motion to strike as to the defendant’s second special defense. As discussed in part I of this opinion, the witnessing defect in the mortgage deed was cured by operation of the validating act, and the substitute plaintiff’s claim of foreclosure neither depended on nor was inseparably connected with the alleged fraudulent conduct of Salerno. Moreover, the defendant did not allege that the conduct claimed to be unclean was done directly against her interests.⁸ Id., 311 (“the conduct alleged to be unclean must have been done directly against the interests of the party seeking to invoke the doctrine”). Accordingly, the unclean hands doctrine was not available to the defendant on the basis of the allegations made in support of her second special defense.

The judgment is affirmed and the case is remanded for the purpose of setting new law days.

In this opinion the other judges concurred.

⁸ Indeed, during oral argument before this court, the following exchange occurred:

“The Court: What was the fraud on your client?”

“[The Defendant’s Counsel]: I don’t think it’s fraud on my client at all.”

192 Conn. App. 171

AUGUST, 2019

171

Kusy v. Norwich

ANDRZEJ KUSY v. CITY OF NORWICH ET AL.
(AC 41721)

Keller, Prescott and Moll, Js.

Syllabus

The plaintiff sought to recover damages from the defendants, the city of Norwich, its board of education and several city employees, for, inter alia, negligence in connection with injuries he sustained when he slipped and fell on snow or ice while delivering milk for his employer, G Co., at a city school. The plaintiff alleged in his complaint that the defendants acted negligently because the school's custodial staff had a ministerial duty to clear the snow and ice from the delivery ramp but failed to do so. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground of government immunity, concluding that snow and ice removal is discretionary in nature as a matter of law and, thus, that the plaintiff failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether the removal of snow and ice is a ministerial act for which the city could be held liable pursuant to statute (§ 52-557n [a] [2] [B]). The court also determined that the plaintiff was not an identifiable victim for purposes of the identifiable person-imminent harm exception to governmental immunity. On the plaintiff's appeal to this court, held:

1. The plaintiff could not prevail on his claim that the trial court improperly rendered summary judgment in favor of the defendants on the ground of governmental immunity, which was based on his claim that snow and ice removal by a municipality is a ministerial act as a matter of law: in the absence of a policy or directive prescribing the manner in which a municipal official is to remove snow and ice, such an act is discretionary in nature, and, therefore, the trial court properly determined that the removal of snow and ice at the school was discretionary in nature, as a city official provided an affidavit in which she averred that no such policy existed, the plaintiff provided no evidence that a snow and ice removal policy existed and he conceded in his memorandum of law in opposition to the defendants' motion for summary judgment that the defendants did not have a written snow and ice removal policy; moreover, contrary the plaintiff's contention that the issue of whether the removal of snow and ice is ministerial in nature is a factual question that is reserved for the jury and may not be decided by the trial court by way of summary judgment, our Supreme court has established that, where, as here, the plaintiff failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact that a policy or directive existed that could render the act ministerial in nature, the question of whether an act is ministerial in nature is to be determined by the trial court as a matter of law.
2. The trial court properly determined that the plaintiff failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether he was an identifiable

172

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 171

Kusy v. Norwich

victim for purposes of the identifiable person-imminent harm exception to governmental immunity; this court declined the plaintiff's request to expand the narrow identifiable class of foreseeable victims to include not only schoolchildren who are statutorily compelled to be on school grounds during regular school hours, but also a person, like the plaintiff, who was present on municipal property because his or her employer was required by contract to perform a service in that location, as the plaintiff, unlike schoolchildren, was not required by law to be on the school's grounds, G Co. could have met its contractual obligation to deliver milk to the school by waiting or returning at a later time after the school had an opportunity to ensure that the delivery ramp was free of snow and ice, our courts have not treated other classes of individuals, apart from schoolchildren, who are present on school grounds during school hours as identifiable victims because there is always an aspect of voluntariness to their presence on school grounds, and even when schoolchildren are on school grounds, our courts have not classified them as identifiable victims if they are on school property as part of voluntary activities.

Argued April 16—officially released August 27, 2019

Procedural History

Action to recover damages for, inter alia, the defendants' alleged negligence, and for other relief, brought to the Superior Court in the judicial district of New London, where the court, Calmar, J., granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment and rendered judgment thereon, from which the plaintiff appealed to this court. Affirmed.

Matthew T. Wax-Krell, with whom was Andrew W. Krevolin, for the appellant (plaintiff).

Jeffrey G. Schwartz, for the appellees (defendants).

Opinion

PRESCOTT, J. This is a personal injury action brought by the plaintiff, Andrzej Kusy, against the defendants, the city of Norwich, its board of education, and certain municipal employees,¹ seeking to recover damages for ¹ In addition to the city of Norwich and the Norwich Board of Education, the defendants are Abby Dolliver, the superintendent of Norwich public schools; William Peckrul, the principal of Kelly Middle School; and Edward Gunter, the head custodian of Kelly Middle School.

192 Conn. App. 171

AUGUST, 2019

173

Kusy v. Norwich

injuries he sustained after he slipped and fell on snow or ice while delivering milk for his employer, Guida's Dairy (Guida's), at a Norwich school. The plaintiff appeals from the trial court's summary judgment rendered in favor of the defendants on the ground that they are entitled to governmental immunity.

On appeal, the plaintiff claims that the trial court improperly rendered summary judgment in favor of the defendants on the ground of governmental immunity because he adequately raised a genuine issue of material fact as to whether (1) the removal of snow and ice at a school is a ministerial rather than a discretionary act, and (2) the plaintiff was an identifiable victim because he had a contractual duty to deliver milk to the school. We disagree with both claims and, therefore, affirm the judgment of the trial court.

The record before the court, viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff as the nonmoving party, reveals the following facts and procedural history. On February 24, 2015, the plaintiff delivered milk to Kelly Middle School in Norwich for Guida's. The plaintiff had been making these deliveries to the school "[t]wo times a week for at least seven months." On the day of the injury, the plaintiff was delivering milk in the area designated for such deliveries. The weather was "sunny but cold" during the morning of February 24, 2015, and it last snowed a few days prior. The plaintiff, nevertheless, noticed ice on the delivery ramp and notified the supervisor of the school's kitchen, who contacted the maintenance person for the school.

The plaintiff also contacted his employer to alert it to the icy conditions. The plaintiff had a brief conversation with John Guida at Guida's and explained the conditions to him. Despite his report, Guida ordered him to complete the delivery. Approximately twenty-five minutes after speaking to Guida and traveling up and down the ramp multiple times, the plaintiff slipped and fell.

174

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 171

Kusy v. Norwich

No one removed the snow and ice during the period between the time the plaintiff reported the icy conditions to the school employee and when he fell.

The plaintiff commenced this action on February 21, 2017. The complaint contains three counts: the first two counts contain allegations of negligence against the defendants and the third count is against the city of Norwich (city) for indemnity pursuant to General Statutes § 7-465.² The plaintiff alleged that the defendants acted negligently because, inter alia, the school's custodial staff had a ministerial duty to clear the snow and ice from the delivery ramp and failed to do so. The plaintiff also alleged that he was a member of "a foreseeable class of identifiable victims" and was subjected to "a risk of imminent harm."

On December 6, 2017, the defendants filed a motion for summary judgment. They asserted that governmental immunity barred them from being held liable because the plaintiff could not demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact regarding any exception to governmental immunity. The trial court granted the motion for summary judgment on May 21, 2018, and issued a memorandum of decision setting forth its reasoning.

² In rendering summary judgment, the trial court did not explicitly address count three of the plaintiff's complaint. "[Our Supreme Court] previously . . . recognized that [General Statutes] §§ 7-465 and 52-557n are coextensive . . . and . . . concluded that the availability of indemnification under § 7-465 (a) for municipal employees' torts may be constrained by § 52-557n (a)." (Citation omitted; footnote omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Grady v. Somers, 294 Conn. 324, 346-47, 984 A.2d 684 (2009).

"Under § 7-465, the municipality's duty to indemnify attaches only when the employee is found to be liable and the employee's actions do not fall within the exception for wilful and wanton acts." Myers v. Hartford, 84 Conn. App. 395, 401, 853 A.2d 621, cert. denied, 271 Conn. 927, 859 A.2d 582 (2004).

Because the city's obligation to indemnify the other defendants arises only if the principal tortfeasors are liable for the plaintiff's injuries, we construe the trial court's summary judgment on the negligence counts to encompass count three. If governmental immunity bars liability on the first two counts, then there is no underlying liability for which the municipality must indemnify.

192 Conn. App. 171

AUGUST, 2019

175

Kusy v. Norwich

In its memorandum of decision, the trial court concluded that the defendants were entitled to summary judgment because General Statutes § 52-557n (a) (2) (B) prevents a municipality from being held liable for the discretionary acts of its employees, even if the acts are performed negligently. The trial court indicated that an act is discretionary as a matter of law in the absence of a directive limiting the discretion of a municipal employee's performance of the act. The trial court stated that the defendants presented evidence showing that they had no policy concerning snow and ice removal and that the plaintiff provided no evidence tending to demonstrate the existence of such a policy. On this record, the trial court concluded that snow and ice removal is discretionary in nature as a matter of law, and, thus, the plaintiff failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether the removal of snow and ice is a ministerial act for which the city could be held liable.

The trial court also addressed the plaintiff's contention that, even if snow and ice removal is discretionary in nature, the defendants were not entitled to governmental immunity because the identifiable person-imminent harm exception to discretionary act immunity applies. The trial court, however, determined that the plaintiff was not an identifiable victim because "he was not a child attending a public school during school hours." This appeal followed.

This court's standard of review for a motion for summary judgment is well established. "Practice Book § [17-49] provides that summary judgment shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, affidavits and any other proof submitted show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. . . . In deciding a motion for summary judgment, the trial court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving

176

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 171

Kusy v. Norwich

party. . . . The party seeking summary judgment has the burden of showing the absence of any genuine issue [of] material facts which, under applicable principles of substantive law, entitle him to a judgment as a matter of law . . . and the party opposing such a motion must provide an evidentiary foundation to demonstrate the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. . . . [I]ssue-finding, rather than issue-determination, is the key to the procedure. . . . [T]he trial court does not sit as the trier of fact when ruling on a motion for summary judgment. . . . [Its] function is not to decide issues of material fact, but rather to determine whether any such issues exist. . . . Our review of the decision to grant a motion for summary judgment is plenary. . . . We therefore must decide whether the court's conclusions were legally and logically correct and find support in the record." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) DiMiceli v. Cheshire, 162 Conn. App. 216, 221–22, 131 A.3d 771 (2016).

I

The plaintiff first claims that snow and ice removal by a municipality is a ministerial act as a matter of law. In the alternative, the plaintiff contends that whether the removal of snow and ice is ministerial in nature is a factual question that is reserved for the jury and may not be decided by the court by way of summary judgment. We disagree.

In Ventura v. East Haven, 330 Conn. 613, 629, 199 A.3d 1 (2019), our Supreme Court restated the well established principles that govern the statutory distinction between ministerial and discretionary acts: "The law pertaining to municipal immunity is . . . well settled. [Section] 52-557n abandons the common-law principle of municipal sovereign immunity and establishes the circumstances in which a municipality may be liable for damages. . . . One such circumstance is

192 Conn. App. 171

AUGUST, 2019

177

Kusy v. Norwich

a negligent act or omission of a municipal officer acting within the scope of his or her employment or official duties. . . . [Section] 52-557n (a) (2) (B), however, explicitly shields a municipality from liability for damages to person or property caused by the negligent acts or omissions [that] require the exercise of judgment or discretion as an official function of the authority expressly or impliedly granted by law.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.)

Accordingly, a municipality is entitled to immunity for discretionary acts performed by municipal officers or employees but may be held liable for those acts that are not discretionary but, rather, are ministerial in nature. “[O]ur courts consistently have held that to demonstrate the existence of a ministerial duty on the part of a municipality and its agents, a plaintiff ordinarily must point to some statute, city charter provision, ordinance, regulation, rule, policy, or other directive that, by its clear language, compels a municipal employee to act in a prescribed manner, without the exercise of judgment or discretion.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 631; see also Violano v. Fernandez, 280 Conn. 310, 323, 907 A.2d 1188 (2006) (holding that “the plaintiffs . . . have failed to allege that the acts or omissions complained of were ministerial in nature because . . . the plaintiffs have not alleged that [the defendant] was required by any city charter provision, ordinance, regulation, rule, policy, or any other directive to secure the property in any prescribed manner” [citation omitted]). Furthermore, this court held previously that evidence of a policy that merely states general responsibilities without “provisions that mandate the time or manner in which those responsibilities are to be executed, leaving such details to the discretion and judgment of the municipal employees,” is insufficient to show that the act is ministerial. Northrup v. Witkowski, 175 Conn. App. 223, 238, 167 A.3d 443

178 AUGUST, 2019 192 Conn. App. 171

Kusy v. Norwich

(2017), aff'd, 332 Conn. 158, A.3d (2019). Therefore, if there is no directive setting forth the manner in which a municipal official is to perform the act, then the act is not ministerial and is therefore discretionary in nature.

This court has already concluded that, in the absence of a directive prescribing the manner in which an official is to remove snow and ice, such an act is discretionary in nature. Beach v. Regional School District Number 13, 42 Conn. App. 542, 553–55, 682 A.2d 118, cert. denied, 239 Conn. 939, 684 A.2d 710 (1996). In Beach, like in the present case, the plaintiff, whose employment with a private company required her to be on school property, slipped and fell on an icy sidewalk on school grounds. See id., 544–45, 545 n.1.³

Despite our decision in Beach, the plaintiff relies on Koloniak v. Board of Education, 28 Conn. App. 277, 281–82, 610 A.2d 193 (1992), for the proposition that the act of removing snow and ice is ministerial in nature. Koloniak, however, is inapplicable for at least two reasons. In Koloniak, this court relied on a written policy issued by the board of education that “all custodians . . . were to keep the walkways clear of snow and ice.” Id., 281. In the present case, however, neither the plaintiff nor the defendants produced any statute, ordinance, policy, or other directive setting forth a clear

³ Beach predates our Supreme Court’s recent decision in Ventura v. East Haven, supra, 330 Conn. 629, 632, in which the court reiterated the well established principles regarding ministerial and discretionary acts and unequivocally determined that whether an act is discretionary in nature is a question for the court to decide as a matter of law.

The plaintiff in his appellate brief all but ignores this court’s decision in Beach. With respect to Beach, he simply contends that it stands for the proposition that the question of whether the removal of ice and snow is discretionary belongs to the jury rather than the court. We reject this contention in light of our Supreme Court’s decision in Ventura, in which the court plainly held that the determination of whether an act is discretionary is a question of law for the court. Id., 636–37.

192 Conn. App. 171

AUGUST, 2019

179

Kusy v. Norwich

snow and ice removal policy.⁴ Koloniak also has been superseded by decisions of our Supreme Court, in which it has held that even a general written policy, like the one in Koloniak, is insufficient to create a ministerial duty if the written policy does not prescribe the manner in which an official is to carry out the act. See Northrup v. Witkowski, 332 Conn. 158, 169–70, A.3d (2019); Violano v. Fernandez, supra, 280 Conn. 323–24. Thus, the present case and Koloniak are dissimilar.

The plaintiff also relies on dicta from a recent trial court decision as supporting a conclusion that, even in the absence of a policy, snow and ice removal is nevertheless a ministerial act. In Finn v. Hamden, Superior Court, judicial district of New Haven, Docket No. CV-16-6060769-S (September 13, 2017), 2017 WL 5056259, *5, Judge (now Justice) Ecker stated that snow and ice removal is ministerial in nature because “[w]hen it snows, common sense and routine experience tell us that every landowner must remove snow and ice from any sidewalk that is likely to be used by a pedestrian. . . . At least as a general matter, it seems fair to posit that no one with responsibility for sidewalk upkeep should need a written rule, or any explicit directive at all, to realize that the sidewalks must be cleared when there is any accumulation of snow, ice, or slush.” (Emphasis added; footnotes omitted.) We respectfully disagree for two reasons.

First, our Supreme Court in Ventura stated that, in order for an act to be classified as ministerial, there

⁴ Furthermore, the defendants submitted an affidavit in support of their motion for summary judgment from a city official denying the existence of any snow and ice removal policy. The same city official denied the existence of a snow and ice removal policy in response to the plaintiff’s request for production. Moreover, the plaintiff admits that the defendants do not have a written snow and ice removal policy.

180

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 171

Kusy v. Norwich

must be evidence of a directive that “compels a municipal employee to act in a prescribed manner, without the exercise of judgment or discretion.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Ventura v. East Haven, supra, 330 Conn. 631. Thus, the existing standard is more demanding than the one articulated in Finn, which relies simply on “common sense and routine experience.” See Finn v. Hamden, supra, 2017 WL 5056259, *5.

Second, the trial court’s statement in Finn that the act of snow and ice removal is ministerial in nature is belied by an examination of the act itself. The act of snow and ice removal, absent a directive strictly imposing the time and manner in which it is to be done, is inherently a discretionary act because it requires the exercise of judgment. Clearing walkways of snow and ice requires the municipal official performing the act to exercise judgment regarding the amount of snow and ice that must accumulate before it must be removed; the frequency with which the official decides to inspect the walkways to ensure that new patches of ice have not formed on surfaces previously salted, sanded, or cleared; the method that the official decides to use to clear the snow and ice or to eliminate the hazard (i.e., whether to use salt, sand, or neither; the amount of salt or sand that is applied; and the frequency with which salt or sand is applied); which areas to prioritize, including whether to focus on areas of the school grounds frequented by schoolchildren in attendance; and whether a walkway is sufficiently clear for use.⁵

Our analysis accords with Ventura, in which our Supreme Court resolved confusion in our case law

⁵ Indeed, in a recent case involving whether a municipality’s maintenance of storm drains is a ministerial act, our Supreme Court stated that “a municipality necessarily makes discretionary policy decisions with respect to the timing, frequency, method and extent of inspections, maintenance and repairs.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Northrup v. Witkowski, supra, 332 Conn. 170.

192 Conn. App. 171

AUGUST, 2019

181

Kusy v. Norwich

regarding the question of whether an act is ministerial should be determined by the trier of fact or by the trial court as a matter of law. See Ventura v. East Haven, supra, 330 Conn. 632–37. The court decided that it is the responsibility of the latter.⁶ Id., 636–37. “[T]he ultimate determination of whether . . . immunity applies is ordinarily a question of law for the court . . . [unless] there are unresolved factual issues material to the applicability of the defense . . . [in which case] resolution of those factual issues is properly left to the jury.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 632.

In the absence of unresolved issues of fact, a court may render summary judgment in favor of the defendant if “it is apparent from the complaint that the [defendant’s] allegedly negligent acts or omissions necessarily involved the exercise of judgment, and thus, necessarily were discretionary in nature” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Coley v. Hartford, 312 Conn. 150, 162, 95 A.3d 480 (2014); see also Grignano v. Milford, 106 Conn. App. 648, 655, 943 A.2d 507 (2008). Indeed, this court has held that it is appropriate for a trial court to grant a municipal defendant’s motion for summary judgment if the plaintiff is unable to proffer a directive that would impose a ministerial duty. See generally DiMiceli v. Cheshire, supra, 162 Conn. App. 225–29 (holding that none of evidence plaintiff proffered at summary judgment stage created ministerial duty and, therefore, trial court properly rendered summary judgment).

It is true that our Supreme Court and this court have determined that evidence of an unwritten but otherwise clear oral mandate that an act be performed in a particular manner could be sufficient to establish the existence

⁶ “[Our Supreme Court], on numerous occasions, has stated unequivocally that the determination of whether a governmental or ministerial duty exists gives rise to a question of law for resolution by the court.” Ventura v. East Haven, supra, 330 Conn. 634.

182

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 171

Kusy v. Norwich

of a directive that would support a conclusion that the act was ministerial in nature. See Gauvin v. New Haven, 187 Conn. 180, 186–87, 445 A.2d 1 (1982); Wisniewski v. Darien, 135 Conn. App. 364, 374, 42 A.3d 436 (2012). These cases, however, do not excuse a plaintiff from his or her obligation, upon a proper burden shifting, to proffer such evidence in opposition to a motion for summary judgment. As we have held previously, a plaintiff must raise a genuine issue of material fact that a policy or directive exists that could render a particular act ministerial in nature. See DiMiceli v. Cheshire, supra, 162 Conn. App. 228.

In the present case, a city official provided an affidavit in which she averred that no such policy existed. Also, as the trial court observed, the plaintiff provided no evidence that a snow and ice removal policy existed. Furthermore, the plaintiff conceded in his memorandum of law in opposition to the motion for summary judgment that the defendants do not have a written snow and ice removal policy. In light of the undisputed averment by the city official that no snow and ice removal policy existed, the trial court properly determined under the circumstances of this case that the removal of snow and ice at the school was discretionary in nature.

II

The plaintiff also claims the trial court improperly determined that he failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether he was an identifiable victim within the meaning of our governmental immunity jurisprudence. We disagree.

“[Our Supreme Court] has recognized an exception to discretionary act immunity that allows for liability when the circumstances make it apparent to the public officer that his or her failure to act would be likely to subject an identifiable person to imminent harm. . . .

192 Conn. App. 171

AUGUST, 2019

183

Kusy v. Norwich

This identifiable person-imminent harm exception has three requirements: (1) an imminent harm; (2) an identifiable victim; and (3) a public official to whom it is apparent that his or her conduct is likely to subject that victim to that harm. . . . All three must be proven in order for the exception to apply. . . . [T]he ultimate determination of whether [governmental] immunity applies is ordinarily a question of law for the court . . . [unless] there are unresolved factual issues . . . properly left to the jury.” (Citation omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Martinez v. New Haven, 328 Conn. 1, 8, 176 A.3d 531 (2018).

“[Our Supreme Court has] stated previously that this exception to the general rule of governmental immunity for employees engaged in discretionary activities has received very limited recognition in this state.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Strycharz v. Cady, 323 Conn. 548, 573, 148 A.3d 1011 (2016). “[T]he question of whether a particular plaintiff comes within a cognizable class of foreseeable victims for purposes of this exception to qualified immunity is ultimately a question of policy for the courts, in that it is in effect a question of duty. . . . This involves a mixture of policy considerations and evolving expectations of a maturing society [T]his exception applies not only to identifiable individuals but also to narrowly defined identified classes of foreseeable victims. . . . Our [Supreme Court’s] decisions underscore, however, that whether the plaintiff was compelled to be at the location where the injury occurred remains a paramount consideration in determining whether the plaintiff was an identifiable person or member of a foreseeable class of victims. . . . [The court has] interpreted the identifiable person element narrowly as it pertains to an injured party’s compulsion to be in the place at issue In fact, [t]he only identifiable class of foreseeable victims

184

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 171

Kusy v. Norwich

that [the court has] recognized . . . is that of schoolchildren attending public schools during school hours” (Citations omitted; footnote omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 575–76.

The plaintiff claims that he is an identifiable victim for the following reasons: (1) “he was contractually bound to deliver milk to the [s]chool”; (2) “[the plaintiff], like all other vendors of the school, was using the access way provided to him by the school to fulfill his employer’s contractual obligation”; and (3) “[a]t the time of the incident, [he] was making a scheduled delivery, as he had done twice a week for seven months prior thereto.” The plaintiff argues that the combination of these factors is sufficient to give rise to a genuine issue of material fact as to whether he was an identifiable victim because, in a recent case, our Supreme Court stated that “a party is an identifiable person when he or she is compelled to be somewhere. . . . [W]hether the plaintiff was compelled to be at the location where the injury occurred remains a paramount consideration in determining whether the plaintiff was an identifiable person or member of a foreseeable class of victims” (Citation omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) St. Pierre v. Plainfield, 326 Conn. 420, 436, 165 A.3d 148 (2017).

The plaintiff takes the language in St. Pierre out of context. In fact, the court in St. Pierre elaborated, “[with the exception of] one case that has since been limited to its facts . . . [our Supreme Court has] addressed claims that a plaintiff is an identifiable person or member of an identifiable class of foreseeable victims in a number of cases, [and it has] not broadened [its] definition [beyond schoolchildren attending public schools during school hours].” (Footnote omitted.) Id., 436–37.

Students attending public school during school hours are afforded this special designation as “identifiable

192 Conn. App. 171

AUGUST, 2019

185

Kusy v. Norwich

victims” because “they were intended to be the beneficiaries of particular duties of care imposed by law on school officials; they [are] legally required to attend school rather than being there voluntarily; their parents [are] thus statutorily required to relinquish their custody to those officials during those hours; and, as a matter of policy, they traditionally require special consideration in the face of dangerous conditions.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 436. Our Supreme Court applied these same factors to determine that a parent, who attended his son’s high school football game and was injured on the bleachers, is not a member of an identifiable class of foreseeable victims. See Prescott v. Meriden, 273 Conn. 759, 763–65, 873 A.2d 175 (2005).

Nevertheless, the plaintiff asks us to extend the identifiable victim classification to encompass a plaintiff who is present on municipal property because his or her employer is required by contract to perform a service in that location. We decline to do so for the following reasons.

First, unlike schoolchildren, the plaintiff was not required by law to be on school grounds. A contractual duty to deliver milk at the school falls far short of the legal compulsion imposed by our statutes that require a child’s attendance at school.

Second, Guida’s may meet its contractual obligation to deliver milk to the school by waiting or returning at a later time after the school has had an opportunity to ensure that the delivery ramp is free of hazards.⁷ Indeed, it is difficult to imagine that Guida’s would be deemed to have breached its contract to the defendants by failing to deliver milk at that precise time and if the school had not provided a clear and safe means of access for the delivery.

⁷ Our courts have construed the compulsion to be somewhere requirement narrowly. In one case, this court concluded that a plaintiff did not satisfy the requirement because “[t]he plaintiff [did] not [cite] any statute, regulation or municipal ordinance that compelled her to drive her car on the stretch of [the] [s]treet where the accident occurred.” DeConti v. McGlone, 88 Conn. App. 270, 275, 869 A.2d 271, cert. denied, 273 Conn. 940, 875 A.2d 42 (2005). This court also noted that the plaintiff in DeConti failed to satisfy the requirement because “[s]he [did] not [show] that her decision to take [the] particular route was anything but a voluntary decision that was made as a matter of convenience.” Id. In another case, our Supreme Court determined that a person is not an identifiable victim if he is not legally required to be somewhere and could have assigned someone else to go to the location to complete the task in his place. See Grady v. Somers, 294 Conn. 324, 355–57, 984 A.2d 684 (2009). In Grady, the municipality did not provide refuse pickup service, and residents could either obtain a transfer station permit and discard their own refuse, or hire private trash haulers to come to their home. Id., 328 n.4. Because the plaintiff in Grady had the option of hiring an independent contractor to dispose of his refuse, the court did not classify him as an identifiable victim for injuries he sustained when he slipped on an ice patch at the transfer station. Id., 355–56.

Third, our courts have not treated other classes of individuals, apart from schoolchildren, who are present on school grounds during school hours as identifiable victims because there is always an aspect of voluntariness to their presence on school grounds.⁸ See Durrant v. Board of Education, 284 Conn. 91, 100–108, 931 A.2d 859 (2007) (holding that mother who slipped on puddle and sustained injuries while picking up her daughter from after school daycare at city’s elementary school is not identifiable victim); Prescott v. Meriden, 80 Conn. App. 697, 698–701, 703, 836 A.2d 1248 (2003) (holding that parent injured on bleachers during son’s high school football game is not identifiable victim), aff’d, 273 Conn. 759, 873 A.2d 175 (2005).

⁸ In his appellate brief, the plaintiff relies on Tryon v. North Branford, 58 Conn. App. 702, 755 A.2d 317 (2000), as support for his assertion that he is an identifiable victim. Tryon, however, was decided nineteen years ago, and our Supreme Court has more recently focused its analysis regarding whether a plaintiff is an identifiable victim on whether the plaintiff is compelled to be somewhere. See St. Pierre v. Plainfield, supra, 326 Conn. 436–37. The court has, therefore, not extended the classes of identifiable victims beyond schoolchildren who are statutorily required to attend school during school hours. See id. Thus, Tryon is distinguishable because the court in that case did not consider whether the plaintiff was required by statute to be at the parade as part of its analysis concerning whether the plaintiff was an identifiable victim. See Tryon v. North Branford, supra, 710–11.

192 Conn. App. 171

AUGUST, 2019

187

Kusy v. Norwich

Fourth, even when schoolchildren are on school grounds, our courts have not classified them as identifiable victims if they are on school property as part of voluntary activities. See Coe v. Board of Education, 301 Conn. 112, 118–22, 19 A.3d 640 (2011) (holding that student, who was injured at school dance that occurred after school hours and that she voluntarily attended, was not identifiable victim); Costa v. Board of Education, 175 Conn. App. 402, 408–409, 167 A.3d 115 (holding that student was not identifiable victim for injuries sustained during senior class picnic because “[he] was not required to attend the senior picnic, but did so voluntarily” and he “voluntarily participated in pick-up basketball game in which he was injured”), cert. denied, 327 Conn. 961, 172 A.3d 801 (2017).

In sum, we decline to extend the classes of individuals who may be identifiable victims beyond the narrow confines of children who are statutorily compelled to be on school grounds during regular school hours.⁹ Accordingly, having conducted a plenary review of the trial court record, we conclude the plaintiff has failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding the defendants’ entitlement to governmental immunity. With regard to both issues—whether snow and ice removal is ministerial or discretionary and whether the plaintiff is an identifiable victim—the trial court properly determined that the defendants were entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

The judgment is affirmed.

In this opinion the other judges concurred.

⁹ Because we agree with the trial court’s decision to render summary judgment on the basis that the plaintiff is not an identifiable victim, we need not address whether he was subject to imminent harm under the circumstances. See Martinez v. New Haven, supra, 328 Conn. 8 (holding that “[a]ll three [elements] must be proven in order for the exception to apply” [internal quotation marks omitted]).

188

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 188

Sen v. Tsiongas

ISHA SEN v. KOSTAS TSIONGAS
(AC 40963)

Prescott, Elgo and Pellegrino, Js.

Syllabus

The plaintiff sought to recover damages from the defendant, who was the landlord and owner of the apartment building in which she lived, for negligence in connection with personal injuries the plaintiff sustained when she was bitten in the building's common stairway by a dog owned by one of the other tenants. Specifically, the plaintiff alleged, inter alia, that the defendant was negligent in failing to maintain the building premises in a reasonably safe condition by allowing the dog's owner to keep a vicious animal and failing to investigate the animal's history of viciousness. The defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that he did not have any knowledge of the alleged vicious propensities of the dog. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment and rendered judgment thereon, from which the plaintiff appealed to this court. Held that the trial court improperly rendered summary judgment in favor of the defendant, as there was a disputed issue of material fact as to whether the defendant should have known that the dog had vicious propensities: on the basis of the plaintiff's averments that the dog acted viciously toward her when she approached the building and displayed vicious tendencies that were visible to all those who observed it, a jury could reasonably infer that the defendant, who came to the building on a weekly basis, would likely have observed the dog's aggressive tendencies, and the defendant's claim that there was no dispute as to a material fact was further undermined by the existence of additional circumstantial evidence indicating that the defendant should have known that the dog had vicious propensities, as there was evidence that the dog, prior to biting the plaintiff, scratched the plaintiff's husband and bit the son of the dog's owner, that the dog's owner spoke openly about how the dog had been used as bait in dog fighting, and that the defendant had constructive knowledge of the dog's vicious propensities in the form of the defendant's own testimony that the dog once barked at him through the window while he was mowing the lawn and that he observed the dog pull toward him when the dog was walked on a leash; moreover, although the defendant testified that he never saw the dog display vicious tendencies, the trial court was presented with conflicting facts and was required to make a credibility determination, which the court was not permitted to make at the summary judgment stage, and, thus, the existence of those contradictory accounts of the dog's behavior thwarted summary judgment.

(One judge concurring separately)

Argued March 19—officially released August 27, 2019

192 Conn. App. 188

AUGUST, 2019

189

Sen v. Tsiongas

Procedural History

Action to recover damages for the defendant's alleged negligence, and for other relief, brought to the Superior Court in the judicial district of New Britain, where the court, Swienton, J., granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment and rendered judgment thereon, from which the plaintiff appealed to this court. Reversed; further proceedings.

Matthew C. Eagan, with whom was James P. Sexton, for the appellant (plaintiff).

Audrey B. Staropoli, for the appellee (defendant).

Opinion

PELLEGRINO, J. In this premises liability action, the plaintiff, Isha Sen, appeals from the summary judgment rendered in favor of the defendant, Kostas Tsiongas. On appeal, the plaintiff claims that the trial court erred in rendering summary judgment in favor of the defendant, who was the landlord of the apartment building in which the plaintiff lived, because there was a disputed issue of material fact as to whether the defendant should have known that the dog of one of the other tenants had vicious propensities. We agree with the plaintiff and, accordingly, reverse the judgment of the trial court.

The following facts and procedural history are relevant to this appeal. At the relevant times, the plaintiff resided in the second floor apartment of a two unit apartment building at 396 Washington Street in Bristol (building). The defendant was the owner and landlord of the building. On September 18, 2015, at approximately 3:30 p.m., a dog that was owned by the building's first floor tenant bit the plaintiff in the building's common stairway. The plaintiff was taken by ambulance to the University of Connecticut Medical Center in Farmington, where she was treated for her injuries, which included lacerations to and numbness of her right hand.

On May 4, 2016, the plaintiff commenced the present action. In her operative complaint, the plaintiff alleged, inter alia, that the defendant was negligent in failing to maintain the building premises in a reasonably safe condition by allowing the first floor tenant to keep a vicious animal, failing to investigate the animal's history of viciousness, and failing to enforce a provision of the lease that prohibited pets on the premises.

On July 13, 2017, the defendant filed a motion for summary judgment, which was accompanied by an affidavit in which he averred in relevant part: "At no time prior to September 18, 2015, did I have any knowledge of the alleged vicious propensities of the dog involved in the incident. . . . At no time prior to September 18, 2015, did I observe the dog involved in the incident engage in vicious behavior, nor did [the dog's owner] or anyone else inform me that the dog had a propensity toward viciousness."

On August 30, 2017, the plaintiff filed an objection to the defendant's motion for summary judgment. In support of her objection, the plaintiff attached an affidavit in which she averred in relevant part: "[The first floor tenant] spoke openly about how the [dog] had been used as bait in dog fighting. . . . It is my opinion that the [dog] exhibited vicious qualities and that these qualities were apparent to any reasonable person who observed the dog. . . . The [dog] demonstrated aggression by barking, growling, and trying to escape the first floor porch whenever I walked up the stairs. . . . In June of 2015, the [dog] broke out of the porch and advanced toward my husband, trying to bite him. The [dog] managed to scratch him before it was brought under control. . . . Before I was attacked, [the first floor tenant] informed me that the [dog] had bitten his seven year old son."

192 Conn. App. 188

AUGUST, 2019

191

Sen v. Tsiongas

In support of her objection to the defendant's motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff also submitted a transcript of her deposition of the defendant, which was taken on July 31, 2017. During the deposition, the following exchange occurred between the plaintiff's counsel and the defendant:

"Q. You have a rule [in your lease agreement] that says, 'You will not have pets.' Why do you have that rule?

"A. Well, I have that rule more like for . . . pets cause damage . . . sometimes.

"Q. What kind of damage can pets cause?

"A. Well, going to the bathroom in the house, this and that, but if somebody asks me, can I get [a pet], or if [they] have a pet, and they're a good tenant . . . I'd say okay. You know.

* * *

"Q. What kind of damage [other than property damage] is that?

"A. Well, I mean, if a dog or a cat scratches, you know, another human, yes.

"Q. And do you have that rule to protect other humans?

"A. No. It's mostly, I put it in, like I said, for more damage.

* * *

"Q. All right. And can you tell me about [the first floor tenant] asking you about getting a dog?

"A. Yes. He asked me, he wanted to get a dog from The Humane Society and, then I said, okay.

* * *

"Q. Do you know approximately when [the first floor tenant] got the dog?

"A. Probably 2014

192 AUGUST, 2019 192 Conn. App. 188

Sen v. Tsiongas

“Q. And . . . did you see the dog on the property?”

“A. Well, I had seen the dog on the property when they had it out, walking the dog, but I [had] seen the dog inside when I’d go in to do any repairs in the apartments or collect rent.

* * *

“Q. Approximately how often were you at the [building] after they got the dog in 2014?”

“A. Well, I don’t know. Probably, I’d say, once a week. . . .

“Q. Can you tell me about the dog, about what the dog was like?”

“A. Well, like I said, when I was there, I would go into their apartment and the dog wouldn’t bark, or growl, or anything like that to me. I’d see the dog outside when they . . . [had] it on the leash. You know, it pulled, like you know, of course, dogs come and want to see you, but that’s about it. I mean, otherwise . . . one time when I was cutting the grass, the dog barked at me through the window, but all dogs do that, you know.”

On September 5, 2017, the court held a hearing on the defendant’s motion for summary judgment. On September 28, 2017, the court granted the defendant’s motion for summary judgment and rendered judgment in favor of the defendant. In its memorandum of decision, the court stated: “The plaintiff has not put forth any evidence that the [defendant] had actual or constructive knowledge of the dog’s alleged vicious propensities prior to the alleged attack.” This appeal followed. Additional facts will be set forth as necessary.

The plaintiff claims that the trial court erred in rendering summary judgment in favor of the defendant because there was a disputed issue of material fact as to whether the defendant should have known that the

192 Conn. App. 188

AUGUST, 2019

193

Sen v. Tsiongas

dog had vicious propensities. Specifically, the plaintiff argues that the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to her as the nonmoving party, demonstrates the existence of a disputed factual issue. We agree with the plaintiff.

“We begin our analysis with the standard of review applicable to a trial court’s decision to grant a motion for summary judgment. Practice Book § 17-49 provides that summary judgment shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, affidavits and any other proof submitted show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. A party moving for summary judgment is held to a strict standard. . . . To satisfy his burden the movant must make a showing that it is quite clear what the truth is, and that excludes any real doubt as to the existence of any genuine issue of material fact. . . . As the burden of proof is on the movant, the evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the opponent. . . . When documents submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment fail to establish that there is no genuine issue of material fact, the nonmoving party has no obligation to submit documents establishing the existence of such an issue. . . . Once the moving party has met its burden, however, the opposing party must present evidence that demonstrates the existence of some disputed factual issue. . . . It is not enough, however, for the opposing party merely to assert the existence of such a disputed issue. Mere assertions of fact . . . are insufficient to establish the existence of a material fact and, therefore, cannot refute evidence properly presented to the court under Practice Book § [17-45]. . . . Our review of the trial court’s decision to grant [a] motion for summary judgment is plenary.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Anderson v. Dike, 187 Conn. App. 405, 409–10, 202 A.3d 448, cert. denied, 331 Conn. 910, 203 A.3d 1245 (2019).

The following legal principles are also relevant to the plaintiff's claim. "As a matter of well settled common law, [i]t is, of course, the duty of a landlord to use reasonable care to keep in a reasonably safe condition the parts of the premises over which he reserves control. . . . The ultimate test of the duty is to be found in the reasonable foreseeability of harm resulting from a failure to exercise reasonable care to keep the premises reasonably safe. . . . The prevailing common-law conception of the dangerous conditions implicated in this duty, moreover, certainly is capacious enough readily to encompass threats from animals, including known vicious dogs. . . . [A] landlord, in exercising the closely analogous duty to alleviate dangerous conditions in areas of a premises over which it retains control, must take reasonable steps to alleviate the dangerous condition created by the presence of a dog with known vicious tendencies in the common areas of the property." (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Giacalone v. Housing Authority, 306 Conn. 399, 407–408, 51 A.3d 352 (2012).

"We note . . . that our conclusion that the traditional common-law duty of landlords to keep common areas in a reasonably safe condition applies to dangers posed by known dangerous dogs accords with the identical conclusion reached by courts in numerous other jurisdictions. See, e.g., Fouts ex rel. Jensen v. Mason, 592 N.W.2d 33, 40 (Iowa 1999) ('When the landlord knows or has reason to know of the existing dangerous condition, the landlord—to avoid liability—must act to protect those using the common area. . . . [H]ere, although she may not have had control over the dog, [the landlord] knew or had reason to know that the dog posed a danger to those in the common backyard. She therefore had a duty to take reasonable precautions to protect those lawfully in the common area.' . . .)" (Citations omitted; emphasis added.) Giacalone v. Housing Authority, supra, 306 Conn. 409–11.

192 Conn. App. 188

AUGUST, 2019

195

Sen v. Tsiongas

The test for common-law premises liability looks to whether the landlord had actual or constructive knowledge of the dangerous condition on the premises. See, e.g., Noebel v. Housing Authority, 146 Conn. 197, 201, 148 A.2d 766 (1959) (“the test is: would the ordinarily prudent [person] in the position of the defendants, knowing what they knew or should have known, anticipate that harm of the general nature of that suffered was likely to result” [emphasis added]). Thus, in order to prevail on his motion for summary judgment, the defendant in the present case was required to demonstrate the absence of any genuine issue of material fact as to whether he knew, or should have known, of the dog’s vicious propensities. Giacalone v. Housing Authority, supra, 306 Conn. 409–10.

In her affidavit, the plaintiff averred that the dog “demonstrated aggression by barking, growling, and trying to escape the first floor porch whenever [she] walked up the stairs.” Additionally, the plaintiff averred: “It is my opinion that the [dog] exhibited vicious qualities and that these qualities were apparent to any reasonable person who observed the dog.”¹ On the basis of the plaintiff’s averments that the dog acted viciously toward her when she approached the building and displayed vicious tendencies that were visible to all those who observed it, a jury could reasonably infer that the defendant, who came to the building on a weekly basis, would likely have observed the dog's aggressive tendencies. See Tuccio Development, Inc. v. Neumann, 111 Conn. App. 588, 594, 960 A.2d 1071 (2008) (at summary judgment stage, "court must view the inferences to be drawn from the facts in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion" [internal quotation marks omitted]); Solesky v. Tracey, 198 Md. App. 292, 325, 17 A.3d 718 (2011) ("[T]here was uncontroverted evidence that the landlord had visited the property and had seen these particular pit bulls [firsthand]. In light of a neighbor's testimony that 'anybody' who walked near these dogs would experience aggression from the dogs, the jury could have rationally inferred that the landlord, too, observed vicious behavior when she . . . visited the premises."), aff'd on other grounds, 427 Md. 627, 50 A.3d 1075 (2012), superseded by statute as stated in Phillips v. J Bar W, Inc., Docket No. 1167, 2017 WL 4876762, *4 (Md. Spec. App. October 27, 2017). Although a jury could reasonably infer that the defendant had the opportunity to observe the dog's aggressive tendencies, the defendant testified that he never saw the dog display vicious tendencies. Thus, the trial court in the present case was presented with conflicting facts and was required to make a credibility determination. Because the court is not permitted to make such a credibility determination at the summary judgment stage, the existence of these contradictory accounts of the dog's behavior thwarts summary judgment. See, e.g., Straw Pond Associates, LLC v. Fitzpatrick, Mariano & Santos, P.C., 167 Conn. App. 691, 710, 145 A.3d 292 ("In summary judgment, the court's role is not to weigh the credibility of the parties, which falls within the province of the finder of fact. . . . When a court, in ruling on a motion for summary judgment, is confronted with conflicting facts, resolution and interpretation of which would require determinations of credibility, summary judgment is not appropriate." [Citation omitted.]), cert. denied, 323 Conn. 930, 150 A.3d 231 (2016).

¹ We do not believe that this statement constitutes inadmissible evidence. Although a lay witness is generally not permitted to give opinion testimony, “[t]he use of such words as ‘I think,’ ‘probably,’ or ‘it is my impression’ are not uncommon in lay testimony and do not make such evidence opinion unless it is clearly so from all the circumstances.” E. Prescott, Tait’s Handbook of Connecticut Evidence (6th Ed. 2019) § 7.1.2, p. 434. Because evidence is to be construed in favor of the nonmoving party in considering a motion for summary judgment, and because the aforementioned principle is relevant to this issue, we conclude that, although the plaintiff prefaced her statement by stating “[i]t is my opinion,” the statement constituted a factual assertion regarding the dog’s behavior rather than an opinion.

192 Conn. App. 188

AUGUST, 2019

197

Sen v. Tsiongas

The defendant’s argument that there was no dispute as to a material fact before the trial court is further undermined by the existence of additional circumstantial evidence indicating that the defendant should have known that the dog had vicious propensities. “Circumstantial evidence is, of course, also available on the question of notice or knowledge of the specific defects” Cruz v. Drezek, 175 Conn. 230, 235–36, 397 A.2d 1335 (1978). In the present case, there was evidence that, prior to biting the plaintiff on September 18, 2015, the dog scratched the plaintiff’s husband and bit the first floor tenant’s son.

Moreover, the plaintiff averred that the dog’s owner “spoke openly about how the [dog] had been used as bait in dog fighting.” Although this evidence came in through the plaintiff’s affidavit, dismissing these statements out of hand amounts to a credibility determination and, therefore, runs afoul of the well established rule that “[w]hen deciding a summary judgment motion, a trial court may not resolve credibility questions raised by affidavits or deposition testimony submitted by the parties.” Doe v. West Hartford, 328 Conn. 172, 197, 177 A.3d 1128 (2018); see id., 196 (concluding that trial court erred when it dismissed “out of hand” deposition testimony that created genuine issue of material fact).

Moreover, there was evidence that the defendant had constructive knowledge of the dog’s vicious propensities in the form of the defendant’s own testimony that the dog once barked at him through the window while he was mowing the lawn and that he observed the dog pull toward him when the dog was walked on a leash. Although the defendant described these behaviors as things “all dogs” do, this evidence, in conjunction with the evidence described in the preceding paragraphs of this decision, could reasonably be viewed by the jury as indicating that the defendant had constructive notice of the dog’s vicious propensities. On the basis of the

198

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 188

Sen v. Tsiongas

foregoing, we conclude that there is a disputed issue of material fact and, therefore, that summary judgment was improper.²

The judgment is reversed and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

In this opinion, ELGO, J., concurred.

PRESCOTT, J., concurring. I agree with the opinion of the majority that the trial court improperly rendered summary judgment in favor of the defendant, Kostas Tsiongas. In reaching this conclusion, however, I conclude, unlike the trial court, that the fact that the dog that bit the plaintiff, Isha Sen, in this case is a pit bull is a relevant factual consideration in assessing whether the landlord-defendant had constructive knowledge of the dog's vicious propensities.¹ Because the question of whether, in the absence of any consideration of the breed of the dog in this case, the trial court properly rendered summary judgment in favor of the defendant is a close one, I am of the view that it is appropriate to address the relevance of the breed of the dog.

² Because we reached this conclusion without considering the breed of the dog, we need not address the defendant's argument that the trial court should have considered the fact that the dog was a pit bull in assessing whether the defendant had constructive notice of the dog's viciousness. We, therefore, see no reason to determine the breed issue and do not agree with Judge Prescott's concurrence that the breed of the dog should be considered in assessing premises liability, in the absence of the articulation of such a rule by our Supreme Court or legislature.

¹ With respect to the fact that the dog in this case is a pit bull or a mixed breed pit bull, the trial court stated that it "is not about to make a global finding that if a dog bite case involves a pit bull and/or bait pit bull, the landlord is on notice for vicious tendencies." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) The trial court's statement incorrectly suggests that it was being asked to decide whether the fact that the dog in the case was a pit bull establishes, by itself, as a matter of law, that the landlord had constructive knowledge of its vicious tendencies. The plaintiff has made no such claim. Instead, she merely asserts that it is one relevant fact, among others, that raises a genuine issue of material fact regarding the landlord's constructive knowledge.

192 Conn. App. 188

AUGUST, 2019

199

Sen v. Tsiongas

Numerous courts have concluded that pit bulls or mixed breed pit bulls pose dangers to people greater than most, if not all, other breeds of dogs. See, e.g., Altman v. High Point, 330 F.3d 194, 206 (4th Cir. 2003) (“pit bulls . . . are a dangerous breed of dog”); Vanater v. South Point, 717 F. Supp. 1236, 1241 (S.D. Ohio 1989) (“[w]hile [p]it [b]ulls are not the only breed of dog which can be dangerous or vicious, it is reasonable to single out the breed to anticipate and avoid the dangerous aggressiveness which may be undetectable in a[n] [individual] [p]it [b]ull”); see also Tracey v. Solesky, 427 Md. 627, 644 n.18, 50 A.3d 1075 (2012), superseded by statute as stated in Phillips v. J Bar W, Inc., Docket No. 1167, 2017 WL 4876762, *4 (Md. Spec. App. October 27, 2017).²

Many localities have banned or highly regulated ownership of pit bulls, against constitutional challenge, because of the pit bull’s vicious tendencies and ability to cause severe injuries. See, e.g., American Dog Owners Assn., Inc. v. Dade County, 728 F. Supp. 1533, 1538–43 (S.D. Fla. 1989); Starkey v. Chester, 628 F. Supp. 196, 197–98 (E.D. Pa. 1986); Holt v. Maumelle, 307 Ark. 115, 117–19, 817 S.W.2d 208 (1991); Colorado Dog Fanciers, Inc. v. Denver, 820 P.2d 644, 650–54 (Colo. 1991) (en banc); State v. Peters, 534 So. 2d 760, 763–65 (Fla. App.

² The Court of Appeals of Maryland in Tracey concluded that a landlord should be held strictly liable for injuries caused by a tenant’s pit bull. The Maryland legislature subsequently overturned the decision in Tracey by enacting Md. Code Ann., Cts. & Jud. Proc. § 3-1901 (b) (West 2014). This statute, however, only abrogated Maryland common law to the extent that it imposed strict liability on a landlord for injuries caused by a tenant’s pit bull. It did not overturn Maryland common law as it existed on or prior to April 1, 2012. Maryland common law prior to April 1, 2012, provided that it is a relevant factual consideration in determining a landlord’s liability for injuries caused by a tenant’s dog that the animal was a pit bull. See, e.g., Matthews v. Amberwood Associates Ltd. Partnership, Inc., 351 Md. 544, 561, 719 A.2d 119 (1998) (noting that “[t]he extreme dangerousness of this breed, as it has evolved today, is well recognized”).

200

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 188

Sen v. Tsiongas

1988), review denied, 542 So. 2d 1334 (Fla. 1989); American Dog Owners Assn., Inc. v. Des Moines, 469 N.W.2d 416, 417–19 (Iowa 1991); Hearn v. Overland Park, 244 Kan. 638, 647–50, 772 P.2d 758, cert. denied, 493 U.S. 976, 110 S. Ct. 500, 107 L. Ed. 2d 503 (1989); Bess v. Bracken County Fiscal Court, 210 S.W.3d 177, 181–83 (Ky. App. 2006); Garcia v. Tijeras, 108 N.M. 116, 118–24, 767 P.2d 355 (App.), cert. denied, 107 N.M. 785, 765 P.2d 758 (1988); Toledo v. Tellings, 114 Ohio St. 3d 278, 281–84, 871 N.E.2d 1152 (2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 1225, 128 S. Ct. 1302, 170 L. Ed. 2d 140 (2008); Greenwood v. North Salt Lake, 817 P.2d 816, 818–21 (Utah 1991); Dog Federation of Wisconsin, Inc. v. South Milwaukee, 504 N.W.2d 375 (Wis. Ct. App.), review denied, 508 N.W.2d 423 (Wis. 1993). Furthermore, several branches of our military ban pit bulls from housing facilities on military bases because of concerns regarding the breed’s tendency toward viciousness. See, e.g., D. Conkright, Department of the Army, “Memorandum for See Distribution: United States Army Garrison Humphreys, Policy Letter #34, Ownership and Control of Pets,” (July 21, 2013), available at <https://www.army.mil/e2/c/downloads/328371.pdf> (last visited August 12, 2019).

In light of the pit bull breed’s vicious tendencies, at least two courts have held that it is “objectively reasonable” for a person to assume an approaching pit bull is vicious even though that individual pit bull is, in fact, “a friendly, nonviolent dog who would not have harmed [others]” Warboys v. Proulx, 303 F. Supp. 2d 111, 118 and n.13 (D. Conn. 2004); see also United States v. Sutton, 336 F.3d 550, 551, 554 (7th Cir. 2003) (holding that less than full compliance with knock and announce rule was reasonable under circumstances, in part, because “pit bull dogs [known for their hostility to strangers] had been seen on the property,” which police identified as “[a] potential [threat] to officer safety”); Pickens v. Wasson-Hunt, United States

192 Conn. App. 188

AUGUST, 2019

201

Sen v. Tsiongas

District Court, Docket No. 04-0678-CV-W-HFS (W.D. Mo. August 7, 2006) (determining that police officers were not unreasonable in directing their weapons at pit bull who was not acting aggressively because “it is clear that the unquantifiable, unpredictable aggressiveness and gameness of pit bulls make them uniquely dangerous”).

In Warboys, the court determined that a police officer was not required to wait until the pit bull leaped toward him to take protective action. Warboys v. Proulx, supra, 303 F. Supp. 2d 118. In making this determination, the court considered extensively the vicious tendencies of the pit bull breed. See id., 118–19 n.13. On the basis of this information, the court concluded that “it is reasonable to single out the [pit bull] breed to anticipate and avoid the dangerous aggressiveness [that] may be undetectable in a[n] [individual] [p]it [b]ull.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 119 n.13. Thus, the court in Warboys determined that the officer did not need to know about the behavioral characteristics or propensities of the individual pit bull approaching him; the fact that the pit bull breed itself is known for violent behavior was a sufficient basis for the officer to determine how to treat the approaching dog.

Although breed does not establish by itself a prima facie case of constructive knowledge of danger, it is a relevant factual consideration to be evaluated along with the other evidence. In light of the danger some pit bulls pose to people, some courts have held that evidence regarding the vicious tendencies of the pit bull breed may be considered by a jury as part of its determination of whether a defendant had reason to know of an individual pit bull’s dangerousness.³ See,

³ At least one court has held that if a dog breed is known for “vicious tendencies,” then “knowledge of vicious propensities can be implied due to the type of dog involved” Plue v. Lent, 146 App. Div. 2d 968, 969, 537 N.Y.S.2d 90 (1989). If, however, the breed is not known for vicious tendencies, then such an inference cannot be made. See id. Plue, however,

202

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 188

Sen v. Tsiongas

e.g., Drake v. Dean, 15 Cal. App. 4th 915, 923–24, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 325 (1993) (determining that evidence of pit bulls historically being bred for aggressiveness may be considered by jury to consider dangerousness of individual pit bull); Giaculli v. Bright, 584 So. 2d 187, 188, 189 (Fla. App. 1991) (holding that landlord could be held liable for injuries to plaintiff’s son caused by neighbor’s pit bull because “it is not necessary that pit bulls be declared vicious per se under the law in order for the landlord and owners to be placed on notice that a tenant has a vicious dog” and, therefore, “[t]he fact that the dog was barking and lunging, particularly in light of the characteristics of pit bulls, is sufficient for a jury to reasonably conclude that the landlord was on notice of the vicious propensity of the dog”); Hampton ex rel. Hampton v. Hammons, 743 P.2d 1053, 1056, 1061 (Okla. 1987) (holding that “evidence relating to the nature of pit [bulls] as a breed is properly admissible” because it is relevant in determining whether defendant is liable for common-law negligence).

Moreover, an animal’s type has been a consideration our Supreme Court has used to determine whether the owner of the animal is liable for the injuries it caused.⁴

did not involve a pit bull. See id. Instead, it involved an Afghan hound, which the court described as “a noble and dignified animal, which, when properly treated, is aloof to strangers and characteristically gentle with everyone.” Id. The court contrasted this dog with a German Shepherd, which the court described as “a breed said to have inherited vicious tendencies from its ancestor, the wolf” (Citation omitted.) Id.

⁴In a case involving a horse at a commercial farm, our Supreme Court stated, “[i]n making the determination as to whether, as a matter of public policy, the owner or keeper of a domestic animal that has not previously exhibited mischievous propensities may be held liable for injuries that were foreseeable because the animal belonged to a class of animals with naturally mischievous propensities, we consider the following four factors: (1) the normal expectations of the participants in the activity under review; (2) the public policy of encouraging participation in the activity, while weighing the safety of the participants; (3) the avoidance of increased litigation; and (4) the decisions of other jurisdictions.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Vendrella v. Astriab Family Ltd. Partnership, 311 Conn. 301, 322, 87 A.3d 546 (2014).

192 Conn. App. 188

AUGUST, 2019

203

Sen v. Tsiongas

The court has held that, even in the absence of evidence purporting to show the vicious tendencies of an individual animal, an owner may be held liable for negligence for the foreseeable harms⁵ of an animal that is a part of a “class of animals that is naturally inclined to cause such injuries”⁶ (Emphasis added.) Vendrella v. Astriab Family Ltd. Partnership, 311 Conn. 301, 306, 87 A.3d 546 (2014); see id. (holding that “the owner or keeper of a domestic animal has a duty to take reasonable steps to prevent injuries that are foreseeable because the animal belongs to a class of animals that ⁵ The court addressed what a plaintiff must show to prove that the harm caused by a domestic animal was foreseeable to the defendant. “[T]o establish that an injury caused by a domestic animal was foreseeable, the plaintiff need not prove that the species as a whole has a natural tendency to inflict such harm, but only that the class of animals to which the specific animal belongs has such a tendency. . . . Conversely, if a plaintiff presents evidence that an entire species has naturally mischievous propensities, the defendant may rebut this evidence by producing evidence that the mischievous propensities of the specific animal, or of the particular class of animals to which the specific animal belongs, are less severe than the mischievous propensities of the species as a whole.” (Citations omitted; emphasis added.) Vendrella v. Astriab Family Ltd. Partnership, 311 Conn. 301, 333–34, 87 A.3d 546 (2014).

Thus, the court in Vendrella suggests that “class” is a subset of “species.” As applied to the present case, this might mean that although all dogs do not have vicious propensities, certain breeds, like pit bulls, may possess such propensities.

⁶ The common-law rule for negligence “has been modified substantially as it pertains to dogs. Specifically, General Statutes § 22-357 imposes strict liability on the ‘owner or keeper’ of a dog for harm caused by the dog, with limited exceptions.” Giacalone v. Housing Authority, 306 Conn. 399, 405, 51 A.3d 352 (2012). This statute, however, does not impose strict liability on a landlord if a dog that lives in his or her building bites someone. As our Supreme Court observed, “a landlord is not the keeper of a dog for purposes of § 22-357 merely because the landlord acquiesces in the presence of the dog on leased premises, or because the landlord has the authority to require that the dog be removed from the premises in the event that it becomes a nuisance, or even because the landlord has the authority to require that certain conditions be placed on the use of the dog by its owner.” Auster v. Norwalk United Methodist Church, 286 Conn. 152, 162, 943 A.2d 391 (2008). Thus, the statute did not abrogate a plaintiff’s ability to sue a landlord for dog bite injuries under theories of common-law negligence or premises liability. See Giacalone v. Housing Authority, supra, 401–403.

204

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 188

Sen v. Tsiongas

is naturally inclined to cause such injuries, regardless of whether the animal had previously caused an injury or was roaming at large and, accordingly, the owner may be held liable for negligence if he or she fails to take such reasonable steps and an injury results”); see also Hope v. Valente, 86 Conn. 301, 303–305, 85 A. 541 (1912) (holding that, even in absence of evidence concerning behavioral tendencies of defendant’s horse, defendant may be liable for negligence based on manner in which horse was left in street while feeding).

Our Supreme Court in Vendrella, however, declined to classify a horse as presumptively dangerous and refused to hold its keeper strictly liable for the harms it caused. Vendrella v. Astriab Family Ltd. Partnership, supra, 311 Conn. 307–308. Instead, the court determined that because “the plaintiffs’ evidence . . . created a genuine issue of material fact as to whether horses have a natural inclination to bite humans, the case must be submitted to the trier of facts so that it may decide as a matter of fact whether the plaintiffs have met their burden of proof on that issue and, if so, whether the defendants were negligent in controlling [the horse].” (Emphasis in original.) Id., 308. Hence, the court held that it was for the trier of fact to determine whether the “plaintiff’s injuries were foreseeable and, if so, what the appropriate standard of care was, whether the defendants breached that standard of care and, if they did, whether the breach was a proximate cause of the minor plaintiff’s injuries.” Id.; see also Hope v. Valente, supra, 86 Conn. 304–305 (holding that “[u]nder the facts claimed to have been proved it was proper to leave it to the jury to determine whether, regardless of the viciousness of the defendant’s horse, he was negligent in leaving it in the street in the manner claimed”).

I arrive at a conclusion similar to that of our Supreme Court in Vendrella. I do not posit that all pit bulls are vicious, nor do I contend that a landlord is or should be strictly liable for injuries caused by a tenant’s pit

192 Conn. App. 188

AUGUST, 2019

205

Sen v. Tsiongas

bull. Indeed, if the pit bull in the present case was known to lick affectionately every passerby and the defendant had observed such behavior, then it is unlikely that the trier of fact would find that the defendant had constructive knowledge that the dog posed a danger to the other tenants.

Furthermore, I agree with the court in Vendrella and other courts that the fact that an animal is of a certain class—or, in the present case, breed—may create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether a landlord, who owed a plaintiff a duty of care, had constructive knowledge of the vicious propensities of the animal that caused harm. In the present case, whether the defendant had constructive knowledge that this dog had vicious propensities must be determined by the totality of the circumstances presented by the case. In making the factual determination regarding whether the defendant knew or should have known that the dog was vicious, I am not prepared to say that it is irrelevant as a matter of law that the dog is a member of a breed that presents heightened danger to others.⁷

In the present case, the defendant conceded at his deposition that pit bulls are widely known to be aggressive and dangerous dogs.⁸ In my view, the behavioral

⁷ I disagree with the majority's suggestion that I am somehow intruding on a policy decision that should be left to our Supreme Court or the legislature. See footnote 2 of the majority opinion. Although either of those institutions is free to weigh in as a matter of policy on this issue, there simply is nothing inappropriate in this court determining, as a matter of common sense and factual relevance, that the breed of the dog is a fact that bears upon the question of whether the landlord had constructive knowledge of the dog's vicious tendencies.

⁸ The following exchange occurred between the plaintiff's counsel and the defendant:

"[The Plaintiff's Counsel]: Mr. Tsiongas, I mean, do you agree that pit bulls are widely known to be aggressive and dangerous dogs?"

* * *

"[The Defendant]: Well, I mean, I'm sure they are. A lot of people think so. I mean, I don't know. I guess it depends on the dog."

"[The Plaintiff's Counsel]: Do you know that pit bulls have been banned on U.S. military bases?"

* * *

206

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 188

Sen v. Tsiongas

characteristics of the pit bull breed, along with other evidence before the court, create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the defendant had constructive knowledge of the vicious propensities of the dog that harmed the plaintiff. Accordingly, I concur in the decision to reverse the summary judgment rendered in favor of the defendant.

“[The Defendant]: No, I didn’t know that.

“[The Plaintiff’s Counsel]: All right. Did you know that the New York City Housing Authority, which is responsible for providing safe housing for 400,000 New Yorkers [in] around 328 housing projects bans pit bulls from its properties?

* * *

“[The Defendant]: No.

“[The Plaintiff’s Counsel]: Do you know why [it] might do that?

* * *

“[The Defendant]: Okay. I don’t know.

“[The Plaintiff’s Counsel]: Do you have any idea?

* * *

“[The Defendant]: Well, I mean, I’m sure because [it has] problems with them. I mean, I don’t know.

“[The Plaintiff’s Counsel]: What kind of problems?

* * *

“[The Defendant]: All right. Well, I mean, I don’t know what problems.

“[The Plaintiff’s Counsel]: You don’t know what problems pit bulls—

“[The Defendant]: Well, I’m sure some problems. Maybe they’re considered a mean dog, or people abuse them. I don’t know. I mean—

“[The Plaintiff’s Counsel]: You said something, they may be a mean dog because people abuse them. What do you know about abused dogs?

* * *

“[The Defendant]: Well, I mean, from what I know is what I hear in the news, you know, people use them for fighting, you know, this and that. That’s about it.

“[The Plaintiff’s Counsel]: What happens to a dog, do you know what happens to a dog if it’s been used in fighting?

“[The Defendant]: Well, any dog that’s been, you know, abused or used in fighting, it’s probably going to be mean, or hurt, or, I don’t know. I mean—

* * *

“[The Plaintiff’s Counsel]: Do you agree that dogs that are used in fighting might be mean?

“[The Defendant]: Sure. Yes. I’m sure, yes.”

192 Conn. App. 207

AUGUST, 2019

207

State v. Tarasiuk

STATE OF CONNECTICUT v. JACEK TARASIUK
(AC 41362)

Alvord, Prescott and Eveleigh, Js.

Syllabus

Convicted, after a jury trial, of the crimes of assault of public safety personnel and criminal trespass, the defendant appealed to this court. He claimed that the court improperly permitted the state to introduce evidence of a prior felony conviction of the defendant for criminal violation of a restraining order for the purpose of impeaching the defendant's credibility. Held that although the trial court abused its discretion by admitting into evidence the defendant's prior felony conviction, as it had no bearing on his truthfulness and was more than ten years old, the defendant failed to demonstrate that the admission of that evidence constituted harmful error entitling him to a new trial; the state's case against the defendant ultimately did not turn on the defendant's credibility, the state offered proof of each essential element, including testimony from the police officer that while the defendant was resisting being seated in the police cruiser, the police officer was kicked by the defendant, who did not contest that testimony and denied only intentionally kicking the police officer, and the state was not required to prove an intent to physically harm the police officer by the defendant, who testified that the police officer was reasonably identifiable as a peace officer and that although he was too drunk that day to remember whether he was kicking his legs, he did resist being seating in the police cruiser and was thrashing around, and in light of those admissions, which supported a jury finding that the defendant intended to prevent the police officer from performing his duties, the jury reasonably could have found any ameliorative aspects of the defendant's testimony to be not credible and could have credited the police officer's version of the events, and, therefore, the improper admission of the prior felony conviction did not substantially affect the verdict.

Argued March 12—officially released August 27, 2019

Procedural History

Two part substitute information charging the defendant, in the first part, with the crimes of assault of public safety personnel, threatening in the second degree and criminal trespass in the first degree, and, in the second part, with having committed an offense while on release, brought to the Superior Court in the judicial

208

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 207

State v. Tarasiuk

district of New Britain, geographical area number fifteen, where the first part of the information was tried to the jury before Keegan, J.; verdict of guilty of assault of public safety personnel and criminal trespass in the first degree; thereafter, the second part of the information was tried to the jury; verdict and judgment of guilty, from which the defendant appealed to this court. Affirmed.

S. Max Simmons, assigned counsel, for the appellant (defendant).

Linda F. Currie-Zeffiro, assistant state's attorney, with whom, on the brief, were Brian W. Preleski, state's attorney, and David Clifton, assistant state's attorney, for the appellee (state).

Opinion

ALVORD, J. The defendant, Jacek Tarasiuk, appeals from the judgment of conviction, rendered following a jury trial, of one count of assault of public safety personnel in violation of General Statutes § 53a-167c (a) (1) and one count of criminal trespass in the first degree in violation of General Statutes § 53a-107 (a) (1).¹ On appeal, the defendant claims that the trial court abused its discretion by admitting into evidence the defendant's May 24, 2006 unnamed felony conviction for the limited purpose of impeaching the defendant's credibility. We affirm the judgment of the trial court.

The jury reasonably could have found the following facts. On August 8, 2016, the defendant had been drinking alcohol in the parking lot of the Pulaski Democratic Club (club), a social, members only club. Raymond

¹ The defendant was acquitted of one count of threatening in the second degree in violation of General Statutes § 53a-62 (a) (2). After a separate jury trial on a part B information, he was found to have committed a crime while on release, which subjected him to a sentence enhancement pursuant to General Statutes § 53a-40b.

192 Conn. App. 207

AUGUST, 2019

209

State v. Tarasiuk

Szajkowski, the president of the club, confronted the defendant and told him that “he’s trespassing and that he’s not wanted on the property.”

On September 22, 2016, the day at issue in this case, the defendant was unemployed and residing at the Friendship Center, a shelter in the City of New Britain. The defendant met his friend, Skawinski,² and the two began drinking between 8 and 8:30 a.m.³ The two had spent the entire day drinking together, splitting a half gallon of vodka. By 5 or 6 p.m., the two had finished drinking the vodka and had ventured out to purchase more alcohol. The two walked down Grove Street and, eventually, arrived in front of the club. Posted on club property were “no trespassing” signs, written in both English and Polish.⁴

Once in front of the club, the defendant made a “bee-line” toward Szajkowski as he exited his vehicle in the club parking lot. The defendant first asked Szajkowski why he was “harassing [him] and not allowing him to be on the property” Szajkowski informed the defendant that he was not welcome on the club’s property and asked him to leave. The defendant appeared drunk to Szajkowski. The defendant, however, stated that he had engaged Szajkowski after “[Szajkowski] tried [to] drive over [him] in the parking lot.” The defendant called the police to report the incident and awaited their arrival. After waiting some time, Szajkowski also contacted the police to verify whether the defendant had indeed made a complaint. Szajkowski was told that the defendant had made a complaint and that officers were on the way.

² Skawinski’s first name could not be found within the record.

³ According to the defendant, those staying at the Friendship Center are not permitted to remain on-site during the day. The defendant left the center and was joined by Skawinski in some bushes adjacent to train tracks in New Britain. The two commenced drinking there.

⁴ The defendant was born in Poland and has resided in Connecticut for the past thirteen years. English is his second language.

210

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 207

State v. Tarasiuk

Two members of the New Britain Police Department, Officers Jakub Lonczak and Coleman,⁵ responded to the reported disturbance fifteen to twenty minutes later. The defendant was in the club parking lot when the officers arrived. Officer Lonczak observed the defendant to be intoxicated. The defendant gave his account to Officer Lonczak but was told to “let it go, get out of here, go.” The defendant left the property.

While Officer Lonczak was with the defendant, Officer Coleman spoke with Szajkowski. Szajkowski told Officer Coleman that the defendant and Skawinski “approached his car, began yelling at him, inquiring why they were kicked out of the establishment earlier that year” Szajkowski made a trespassing complaint. After interviewing the defendant and Szajkowski, Officers Lonczak and Coleman determined that probable cause existed to arrest the defendant and Skawinski for trespassing.

By the time Officers Lonczak and Coleman determined that there was probable cause to arrest the defendant and Skawinski, they were across the street. The officers returned to their police cruiser, proceeded after the defendant and Skawinski in the cruiser, exited the vehicle and advised both individuals that they were under arrest for trespassing. The defendant was handcuffed without resistance by Officer Lonczak. Simultaneously, Officer Coleman was handcuffing Skawinski, who was not complying. After the defendant was handcuffed and seated on the ground, Officer Lonczak assisted Officer Coleman. At this time, the defendant began screaming profanities at the officers and claiming “police brutality.” The officers immediately sought to place the defendant in the police cruiser to avoid “a bigger disturbance.”

⁵ Officer Coleman’s first name could not be found within the record.

192 Conn. App. 207

AUGUST, 2019

211

State v. Tarasiuk

The defendant resisted being placed in the cruiser. The officers each took one of the defendant's legs to lift him into the cruiser. The defendant, with his rear on the seat, braced his back against the Plexiglas divider within the cruiser.⁶ The defendant "began thrashing and kicking with his feet." The defendant kicked Officer Lonczak in the center of his chest trauma plate, causing him to take a few steps back. Officer Coleman struck the defendant's face to effectuate compliance. The defendant continued to thrash about and kick, eventually kicking Officer Lonczak's left thumb, jamming it. Officer Lonczak struck the defendant in his right torso, and the defendant became compliant. The officers were able to fully seat the defendant in the police cruiser and close the door. The officers transported the defendant to the police station. During the drive to the station, the defendant screamed profanities at the officers.⁷

On June 28, 2017, the defendant was charged in a substitute long form information with one count of assault of public safety personnel in violation of General Statutes § 53a-167c (a) (1), one count of threatening in the second degree in violation of General Statutes § 53a-62 (a) (2) and one count of criminal trespass in the first degree in violation of General Statutes § 53a-107 (a) (1). In a part B information, the defendant was charged with committing a crime while on release in violation of General Statutes § 53a-40b. The defendant pleaded not guilty to all counts in both the substitute long form information and the part B information, and elected a jury trial.

At the defendant's trial on June 27, 2017, the defendant elected to testify in his own defense. Prior to his

⁶ The police cruiser contains a "Plexiglas wall surrounding the seat [in the rear] so individuals can be sat in that little compartment, but the other side is open for officers to place other items that can be used for [their] duty."

⁷ The defendant spoke in both English and Polish. Officer Lonczak, who was born in Poland and raised there until age ten, understood all of what the defendant uttered.

212

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 207

State v. Tarasiuk

testimony, the state indicated its intention to offer evidence of the defendant's prior felony conviction from May 24, 2006, for criminal violation of a restraining order,⁸ in order to impeach the defendant's credibility.⁹ The sentence imposed for that conviction was three years of incarceration, execution suspended after nine months, followed by five years of probation. The state acknowledged that felony convictions that are more than ten years old are generally not admissible but argued that the rule is not hard and fast and that "we're only a couple of months beyond it at this point once you consider the nine month jail sentence." The defendant objected to the admission of the evidence, arguing "it's not relevant to this case and it's beyond the ten year period."

The court admitted the prior felony conviction into evidence for purposes of impeachment. The court stated that "the ten year rule is not a bright line but it's a suggestion. So based on all the information that I've heard on the timing of it, the court feels that it is relevant, it is a felony conviction, however, it must be unnamed and in accordance with [State v. Geyer, 194 Conn. 1, 16, 480 A.2d 489 (1984)]."

During his direct examination, the defendant testified that he had previously been convicted of a felony. On cross-examination, when the state asked about the prior felony conviction, the defendant responded, unsolicited, "[y]es, violation of protection of my wife" During closing argument, the state highlighted the defendant's prior felony conviction as a factor the jury

⁸ The record does not provide the specific statute violated by the defendant for his prior felony conviction. The state referred to the defendant's prior felony conviction as a criminal violation of a restraining order. The defendant did not contest the state's characterization.

⁹ The state indicated its intention to offer the defendant's prior felony conviction into evidence during an in-chambers discussion, which was later repeated on the record.

192 Conn. App. 207

AUGUST, 2019

213

State v. Tarasiuk

could consider in assessing his credibility during its deliberations: “Again, consider the defendant’s unique position in this case. I mean, first of all, he’s a convicted felon. That’s something you can assess when you’re determining how credible he is.” The defendant did not request, and the court did not provide, a contemporaneous limiting instruction to the jury regarding their consideration of the defendant’s prior felony conviction during either direct examination or cross-examination. The court did provide a limiting instruction in its charge to the jury.¹⁰

On June 29, 2017, the jury found the defendant guilty of assault of public safety personnel and criminal trespass in the first degree. The jury acquitted the defendant of threatening in the second degree. After a separate jury trial on the part B information, the jury found that the defendant committed the crimes of which he had just been convicted while on release. The jury’s finding that he had committed crimes while on release subjected him to a sentence enhancement pursuant to General Statutes § 53a-40b.

On July 10, 2017, the defendant filed a motion for a new trial pursuant to Practice Book § 42-53 (a), claiming that the court erred in admitting into evidence the defendant’s prior felony conviction for impeachment purposes. The defendant argued that the “prior felony conviction, which was more than [ten] years old . . .

¹⁰ The court instructed: “In this case, evidence was introduced to show that in 2006 the defendant was convicted of a felony, which is any crime for which a person may be incarcerated for more than one year. Evidence of a commission of a crime other than the one charged is not admissible to prove the guilt of the defendant in this case. The commission of another crime by the defendant has been admitted into evidence for the sole purpose of affecting his credibility. You must weigh the testimony and consider it along with all the other evidence in the case. You may consider the conviction of the defendant only as it bears upon his credibility and you should determine that credibility upon the . . . same consideration as those given to any other witness.”

was more prejudicial than probative.” The court denied that motion in a memorandum of decision dated October 2, 2017. The court stated that under § 6-7 of the Connecticut Code of Evidence, remoteness is “one of the factors to be weighed by the trial court in exercising its discretion whether to admit a particular conviction for impeachment purposes.” The court stated that “[t]he age of a conviction goes to its weight and not its admissibility,” citing State v. Robington, 137 Conn. 140, 144–45, 75 A.2d 394 (1950), and that “[o]ur Supreme Court has never ruled that a felony conviction greater than ten years is an absolute bar to admissibility,” citing State v. Skakel, 276 Conn. 633, 738–42, 888 A.2d 985, cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1030, 127 S. Ct. 578, 166 L. Ed. 2d 428 (2006). The court concluded that “[i]n light of the issue in the case upon which the conviction was permitted to be used, the fact that it was admitted in the sanitized version and the fact that the conviction was slightly over ten years, the court continues to find that the evidence was properly admitted.”

The court rendered judgment in accordance with the jury verdict and imposed a total effective sentence of fifteen years of incarceration followed by five years of special parole. This appeal followed.

The defendant claims that the court abused its discretion by admitting into evidence his May 24, 2006 felony conviction for the purpose of impeaching his credibility as a witness. The defendant argues that the court admitted the over ten year old conviction without properly considering its potential prejudice to the defendant, the significance of the age of the conviction and how the prior conviction bears on the defendant’s veracity. The defendant argues further that had the court undertaken the correct analysis, the court would not have admitted the prior conviction into evidence. The defendant claims that the court’s error was not harmless: “The risk that the harm to the defendant’s credibility created

192 Conn. App. 207

AUGUST, 2019

215

State v. Tarasiuk

by the improperly admitted impeachment evidence sufficed to tip the jury's opinion in [Officer] Lonczak's favor was thus highly prejudicial to the defendant on a matter of the most central importance in the proceedings."

The state argues that the court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the evidence. Additionally, the state contends that even if it was improper to admit the prior conviction into evidence, the court's error was harmless because the defendant's credibility had already been impeached by other evidence. Moreover, the defendant's account of his arrest did not "meaningfully differ" from that of Officer Lonczak's. The defendant states that he had been drinking on September 22, and he could not remember if he kicked Officer Lonczak.

We conclude that the court abused its discretion by admitting into evidence the prior felony conviction of criminal violation of a restraining order because that prior conviction was greater than ten years old and was not probative of truth and veracity. We conclude, however, that the error was harmless.

We first set forth the applicable principles of law and our standard of review. "It is well settled that evidence that a criminal defendant has been convicted of crimes on a prior occasion is not generally admissible. . . . There are, however, several well recognized exceptions to this rule, one of which is that [a] criminal defendant who has previously been convicted of a crime carrying a term of imprisonment of more than one year may be impeached by the state if his credibility is in issue. . . . In its discretion a trial court may properly admit evidence of prior convictions provided that the prejudicial effect of such evidence does not far outweigh its probative value. . . . [Our Supreme Court] has identified

216

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 207

State v. Tarasiuk

three factors which determine whether a prior conviction may be admitted: (1) the extent of the prejudice likely to arise; (2) the significance of the commission of the particular crime in indicating untruthfulness; and (3) its remoteness in time. . . . A trial court's decision denying a motion to exclude a witness' prior record, offered to attack his credibility, will be upset only if the court abused its discretion. . . . Those three factors have been incorporated in [the Connecticut] [C]ode of [E]vidence. Conn. Code. Evid. § 6-7 (a)." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Young, 174 Conn. App. 760, 768–69, 166 A.3d 704, cert. denied, 327 Conn. 976, 174 A.3d 195 (2017).

"[U]nless a conviction had some special significance to untruthfulness, the fact that it [is] more than ten years old [will] most likely preclude its admission under our balancing test." (Emphasis omitted.) Label Systems Corp. v. Aghamohammadi, 270 Conn. 291, 309, 852 A.2d 703 (2004) (interpreting State v. Nardini, 187 Conn. 513, 526, 447 A.2d 396 [1982]). "[T]he danger of unfair prejudice is far greater when the accused, as opposed to other witnesses, testifies, because the jury may be prejudiced not merely on the question of credibility but also on the ultimate question of guilt or innocence." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Cooper, 227 Conn. 417, 435, 630 A.2d 1043 (1993). "With respect to the remoteness prong of the balancing test, we have endorsed a general guideline of ten years from conviction or release from confinement for that conviction, whichever is later, as an appropriate limitation on the use of a witness' prior conviction." State v. Skakel, supra, 276 Conn. 738–39. The ten year marker is not, however, a rigid threshold. "That benchmark . . . is not an absolute bar to the use of a conviction that is more than ten years old, but, rather, serves merely as a guide to assist the trial judge in evaluating the conviction's remoteness." State v. Askew, 245 Conn. 351, 364–

192 Conn. App. 207

AUGUST, 2019

217

State v. Tarasiuk

65, 716 A.2d 36 (1998). “[R]emoteness in time, like relevance of the crime to veracity, is a factor to be weighed by the trial court in exercising its discretion.” State v. Nardini, supra, 526. Nevertheless, “[t]he probative value for credibility purposes of . . . [a conviction is] greatly diminished by the extended period of time which ha[s] elapsed since [its] occurrence.” Id., 528.

Not all felony crimes bear equally on a defendant’s veracity. “[Our Supreme Court] has recognized that crimes involving larcenous intent imply a general disposition toward dishonesty or a tendency to make false statements. . . . [I]n common human experience acts of deceit, fraud, cheating, or stealing . . . are universally regarded as conduct which reflects on a man’s honesty and integrity [Furthermore] larceny, which is the underlying crime in any robbery, bears directly on the credibility of the witness-defendant.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Banks, 58 Conn. App. 603, 616, 755 A.2d 279, cert. denied, 254 Conn. 923, 761 A.2d 755 (2000). “[C]onvictions having some special significance upon the issue of veracity surmount the standard bar of ten years” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Cooper, supra, 227 Conn. 436.

The defendant’s conviction of criminal violation of a restraining order resulted in a three year sentence of imprisonment, suspended after nine months. As that offense is a felony, it falls within one of the exceptions to the general rule that prohibits evidence of prior crimes. See State v. Young, supra, 174 Conn. App. 768. In overruling the defendant’s objection to the admission of the prior felony conviction, the court stated: “Well, in the court’s opinion, based upon case law, the ten year rule is not a bright line but it’s a suggestion. So based on all the information that I’ve heard on the timing of it, the court feels that it is relevant, it is a

218

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 207

State v. Tarasiuk

felony conviction, however, it must be unnamed and in accordance with [State v. Geyer, supra, 194 Conn. 16].”¹¹

The defendant’s prior felony conviction of criminal violation of a restraining order is not one of deceit, fraud, cheating, or stealing. The criminal violation is not larcenous. See State v. Banks, supra, 58 Conn. App. 616. As such, the prior felony conviction has no particular bearing on the defendant’s truthfulness.¹² Because the defendant’s prior felony conviction was more than ten years old when offered by the state and has no bearing on his veracity, it was an abuse of the court’s discretion to admit the prior felony conviction into evidence.

Our conclusion that the court erred in admitting the defendant’s prior felony conviction into evidence does not end our analysis. The defendant concedes that the court’s error is nonconstitutional. For the defendant to be entitled to a new trial, it is incumbent on the defendant to show that the trial court’s evidentiary error was harmful. State v. Clark, 137 Conn. App. 203, 211, 48 A.3d 135 (2012), aff’d, 314 Conn. 511, 103 A.3d 507 (2014). “[A] nonconstitutional error is harmless when an appellate court has a fair assurance that the error did not substantially affect the verdict.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Sawyer, 279 Conn. 331, 357, 904 A.2d 101 (2006), overruled in part on other grounds by State v. DeJesus, 288 Conn. 418, 953 A.2d 45 (2008).

The defendant contends that, because there was no dispute as to whether Officer Lonczak was a readily identifiable police officer in the performance of his duties, the state’s ability to convict the defendant of ¹¹ The defendant’s precise date of release for his May 24, 2006 conviction is not clear from the record. The parties do agree, however, that he was released more than ten years prior to the trial in the present case.

¹² Even though the record does not contain the specific statute that was violated, the conduct necessary to be convicted of violating a restraining order does not speak to truthfulness.

192 Conn. App. 207

AUGUST, 2019

219

State v. Tarasiuk

violating General Statutes § 53a-167c (a) (1) hinged on whether the defendant kicked Officer Lonczak to cause physical injury. The defendant maintains that he and Officer Lonczak gave conflicting testimony as to the kicking, and neither of their accounts were corroborated. Thus, the defendant argues, the prior conviction's admission into evidence tipped the scales too favorably in the state's favor, which was "highly prejudicial" to the defendant.¹³

The state asserts that, although there was no evidence to corroborate Officer Lonczak's testimony that the defendant kicked him, the defendant's testimony was ambiguous. Pointing to the defendant's concession that he resisted arrest and was "thrashing around" while the officers attempted to seat him in the cruiser, the state argues that the defendant's testimony did not deviate meaningfully from Officer Lonczak's. The state also emphasized that the defendant was drunk when arrested, affecting his recollection of the events, which was reflected in his testimony.

We find that there is fair assurance that the jury verdict was not substantially affected by the admission of the prior conviction into evidence. To convict the defendant of assault of public safety personnel under General Statutes § 53a-167c (a) (1), the state was required to prove "(1) intent to prevent a reasonably identifiable peace officer from performing his duties; (2) the infliction of physical injury to the peace officer; and (3) the victim must be a peace officer." (Citation omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Turner, 91 Conn. App. 17, 22, 879 A.2d 471, cert. denied, 276 Conn. 910, 886 A.2d 424 (2005). The state was not ¹³ The defendant also appealed from his criminal trespass conviction, but failed to brief any argument that the admission of the felony conviction affected the jury's verdict on the trespassing charge. Accordingly, we deem any argument that the court's error was harmful to be abandoned as to the criminal trespass conviction.

220

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 207

State v. Tarasiuk

required to show that the defendant had intended to kick Officer Lonczak or that he intended to cause him physical injury. See id.

The essential elements that the state was required to prove ultimately did not turn on the defendant's credibility. Instead, the state offered proof of each essential element and the defendant did not seriously contest that proof. First, the defendant could not remember whether he was kicking his legs, but admitted to resisting being seated in the police cruiser and "thrashing around."¹⁴ The defendant's admission supports a jury finding that the defendant intended to prevent Officer Lonczak from performing his duties. Second, Officer Lonczak testified that in the course of the defendant resisting being seated in the police cruiser, the defendant kicked Officer Lonczak and jammed his thumb. The defendant did not deny kicking Officer Lonczak, the defendant denied only intentionally kicking Officer Lonczak.¹⁵ Third, the defendant admitted on cross-examination that Officer Lonczak was a reasonably identifiable peace officer.

Furthermore, the defendant testified that he was too drunk to remember key events from that day, such as

¹⁴ During cross-examination by the prosecutor, the defendant testified as follows:

"Q. So you just don't remember whether you were kicking your legs or not, but you were thrashing around.

"A. Yes."

* * *

"Q. You're doing everything you can to . . . stop them from getting you in that car.

"A. I'm trying resisting or whatever they call it, yeah.

"Q. And you don't remember kicking the officer.

"A. No.

* * *

"Q. Okay. And you're still thrashing around. You're still kicking those legs.

"A. I don't know."

¹⁵ During his direct examination by defense counsel, the defendant testified as follows:

"Q. Okay. Did you ever intentionally kick either of these gentlemen?

"A. No."

192 Conn. App. 221

AUGUST, 2019

221

State v. Fox

cursing at the officers during the transport to the police station.¹⁶ In light of this admission, the jury reasonably could have found any ameliorative aspects of the defendant's testimony to be not credible and could have credited Officer Lonczak's version of events. Thus, the strength of the state's proof on each of the essential elements of the offense, not the defendant's impeachment by his prior felony conviction, leaves us unpersuaded that the improper admission of his felony conviction substantially affected the verdict. Accordingly, the defendant has not satisfied his burden of demonstrating harmful error.

The judgment is affirmed.

In this opinion the other judges concurred.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT v. MICHAEL FOX
(AC 41009)

Lavine, Keller and Bishop, Js.

Syllabus

Convicted of the crimes of home invasion, conspiracy to commit home invasion, assault in the first degree, and conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree in connection with the assault of the victims, H and E, the defendant appealed to this court. The defendant, along with two others, allegedly broke into H's apartment and assaulted H and E. A police officer, A, testified that he took certain photographs of the scene, including photographs of certain doors of the premises, but while some of the photographs resulted in discernable images, others did not. On appeal, the defendant claimed, inter alia, violations of the federal and state constitutions. Held:

1. The trial court violated the defendant's right against double jeopardy by sentencing him on two counts of conspiracy pursuant to a single agreement with multiple criminal objectives, as the defendant's conviction of both conspiracy charges stemmed from a single unlawful agreement to enter the premises and harm E; accordingly, the proper remedy

¹⁶ During re-direct examination, the defendant admitted that he was drunk at the time of arrest and did not remember that he used profane language toward the officers while in the cruiser on the drive to the station:

"Q. You don't know exactly what you said that day because you were . . . drunk. Right?"

"A. Yes."

State v. Fox

was to remand the case with direction to vacate the defendant's conviction of conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree, and resentencing was not necessary, where, as here, vacatur of the defendant's conviction and sentence for conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree would not alter his total effective sentence.

2. The defendant could not prevail on his claim that the state violated his right to due process under the Connecticut constitution as a result of the destruction or loss of photographs depicting the crime scene, which was based on his claim that the police failed to preserve potentially exculpatory evidence in the form of photographs of the doors of H's apartment, the defendant having failed to meet the balancing test set forth in State v. Asherman (193 Conn. 695), which was applicable to his due process claim: the defendant could not establish the materiality of the indiscernible photographs from the apartment, as the weight of the evidence established that the defendant unlawfully entered or remained in H's apartment, forced entry was not a necessary element of the home invasion charge, although it could be probative of unlawful entry, and there was not a reasonable probability that, had the photographs been discernable, the result of the proceeding would have been different; moreover, the likelihood of mistaken interpretation of the missing evidence by the witnesses or jury was low given the ample testimony regarding the photographs, nothing in the record indicated that the state's failure to preserve useful photographic evidence of the condition of the doors was the result of any bad faith or improper motive on the part of the state or law enforcement, and the defendant failed to show that he was prejudiced as a result of the unavailable evidence, as the court found that the defendant received all evidence available to the state, including any indiscernible photographs, and the state had a strong case with regard to the home invasion charge.
3. The trial court did not err when it denied the defendant's request for an adverse inference jury instruction related to the failure of the police to produce discernable photographs of the apartment doors; no factual basis existed for the specific charge requested by the defendant, as the record was devoid of any evidence that the police investigation was incomplete or that, in their investigation, the police had acted negligently or in bad faith, and even if the trial court should have delivered the requested instruction, in light of the evidence as a whole, its failure to do so was harmless because the defendant failed to show that it was more probable than not that the failure to give the requested instruction affected the result of the trial.

Argued May 16—officially released August 27, 2019

Procedural History

Substitute information charging the defendant with the crimes of home invasion, conspiracy to commit

192 Conn. App. 221

AUGUST, 2019

223

State v. Fox

home invasion, assault in the first degree, and conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree, brought to the Superior Court in the judicial district of Ansonia-Milford, geographical area number twenty-two, and tried to the jury before Markle, J.; verdict and judgment of guilty, from which the defendant appealed to this court. Reversed in part; judgment directed.

Megan L. Wade, assigned counsel, with whom was Emily Graner Sexton, assigned counsel, for the appellant (defendant).

Kathryn W. Bare, assistant state's attorney, with whom, on the brief, was Kevin D. Lawlor, deputy chief state's attorney, for the appellee (state).

Opinion

KELLER, J. The defendant, Michael Fox, appeals from the judgment of conviction, rendered after a jury trial, of home invasion in violation of General Statutes § 53a-100aa (a) (1), conspiracy to commit home invasion in violation of General Statutes §§ 53a-48 and 53a-100aa (a) (1), assault in the first degree in violation of General Statutes § 53a-59 (a) (4), and conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree in violation of General Statutes §§ 53a-48 and 53a-59 (a) (4). On appeal, the defendant claims that (1) the trial court violated the double jeopardy clause of the United States constitution by sentencing the defendant on two counts of conspiracy on the basis of a single agreement with multiple criminal objectives, (2) the state violated the defendant's right to due process under the Connecticut constitution as a result of the destruction or loss of photographs depicting the crime scene, and (3) the trial court erred in denying the defendant's request for an adverse inference jury instruction. We agree with the defendant's first claim only and, accordingly, affirm in part and reverse in part the judgment of the trial court.

The jury reasonably could have found the following facts. Nicole Hart resided in Milford in an in-law apartment (apartment) connected to a main residence. The apartment consists of a bedroom, bathroom, kitchen, and living room. An interior door separates the apartment from the main residence. At the time of the incident in question, Nicole Hart's grandmother, Dorothy Hart, owned the dwelling and lived in the main residence, along with Nicole Hart's cousin, Thomas Hart, and Nicole Hart's father. Nicole Hart's cousin, Christopher Hart, also lived in the main residence at the time of the incident. Nicole Hart and Joe Fox, the defendant's brother, were involved romantically, intermittently from 2007 through October, 2014, and they share a child together. Joe Fox lived with Nicole Hart in the apartment for several weeks, from late September through mid-October, 2014, until the two ended their relationship in the second week of October, 2014.

On October 26, 2014, Thomas Hart texted Joe Fox, alerting him that Nicole Hart's new boyfriend, Anthony Esposito, was at the apartment. Later in the day, Thomas Hart drove to a park near the dwelling where he met Joe Fox, who was driving a vehicle with two passengers: the defendant and Zachary Labbe. Joe Fox then followed Thomas Hart to the dwelling where Thomas Hart, Joe Fox, the defendant, and Labbe exited their vehicles. At approximately 11:30 p.m., the four men entered the main residence through the front door on the left-hand side of the dwelling and proceeded into the apartment. The defendant, Joe Fox, and Labbe then entered Nicole Hart's bedroom where she was in bed asleep with Esposito. Joe Fox dragged Nicole Hart, by her neck, from the bedroom into the adjoining kitchen where he directed expletives at her and strangled her, causing her to lose control of her bladder. From the kitchen, Nicole Hart could hear crashing noises coming from the bedroom where the defendant,

192 Conn. App. 221

AUGUST, 2019

225

State v. Fox

Labbe, and Esposito were located. Joe Fox returned to the bedroom where he, the defendant, and Labbe punched and kicked Esposito. Nicole Hart went to the main residence to call 911 from the residence's landline telephone. Meanwhile, Joe Fox, the defendant, Thomas Hart, and Labbe exited the apartment and left in the same cars in which they had arrived.

Police arrived at the residence at approximately 11:45 p.m. where they found Esposito, who was bleeding and bruised about his head and face. Police also observed blood on the floor of the entry way of Nicole's bedroom as well as on the mattress in Nicole's bedroom. An ambulance took Esposito to the hospital where he was treated for orbital wall fractures of both eyes, a nasal bone fracture, a closed head injury, and lacerations to the inside of his mouth.

Later that same night, police located the vehicle that Joe Fox had used to transport himself, the defendant, and Labbe to and from the dwelling. Law enforcement found Esposito's blood on the steering wheel, exterior driver's side door handle, and exterior driver's side door of the vehicle in question. Lieutenant Richard Anderson, of the Milford Police Department, obtained an arrest warrant for the defendant. The defendant was arrested on October 31, 2014, and subsequently charged with home invasion in violation of § 53a-100aa (a) (1), conspiracy to commit home invasion in violation of §§ 53a-48 and 53a-100aa (a) (1), assault in the first degree as to Esposito in violation of § 53a-59 (a) (4), and conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree as to Esposito in violation of §§ 53a-48 and 53a-59 (a) (4).

Following a jury trial, the defendant was found guilty of home invasion, conspiracy to commit home invasion, assault in the first degree, and conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree. The defendant received a

226

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 221

State v. Fox

total effective sentence of ten years of incarceration.¹ This appeal followed. Additional facts will be set forth as necessary.

I

The defendant first claims that the court violated the double jeopardy clause of the United States constitution by sentencing him on two counts of conspiracy pursuant to a single agreement with multiple criminal objectives. Specifically, he argues that the court committed plain error when it rendered judgment and sentenced him on the charges of conspiracy to commit home invasion and conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree because both of those counts stemmed from a single unlawful agreement to enter the apartment and harm Esposito. In its reply brief, the state agrees with the defendant that there was only one conspiracy and therefore the defendant's conviction of two counts of conspiracy constitutes a violation of the defendant's right against double jeopardy. We, too, agree that a double jeopardy violation exists and that the appropriate remedy is to reverse the judgment of conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree and remand the case to the trial court with direction to vacate the defendant's conviction of conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree.

The defendant concedes, and the state agrees, that his double jeopardy claim was not preserved at trial and thus seeks review pursuant to State v. Golding, 213 Conn. 233, 239–40, 567 A.2d 823 (1989), as modified by ¹ Pursuant to statutory mandatory minimum sentence provisions, the trial court imposed a sentence of ten years of incarceration for the count of home invasion, ten years for the count of conspiracy to commit home invasion, and one year to serve for the counts of assault in the first degree and conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree. The court ordered each of the sentences to run concurrently to each other, for a total effective sentence of ten years of incarceration.

192 Conn. App. 221

AUGUST, 2019

227

State v. Fox

In re Yasiel R., 317 Conn. 773, 120 A.3d 1188 (2015).² The first Golding prong is met because the record is adequate for review. There is a clear record of the allegations underlying the defendant's convictions, as well as a clear record of the offenses of which he was convicted. "A defendant may obtain review of a double jeopardy claim, even if it is unpreserved, if he has received two punishments for two crimes, which he claims were one crime, arising from the same transaction and prosecuted at one trial" (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Urbanowski, 163 Conn. App. 377, 386–87, 136 A.3d 236 (2016), aff'd, 327 Conn. 169 (2017). Additionally, "claims of double jeopardy involving multiple punishments in the same trial present a question of law to which we afford plenary review." State v. Kurzatkowski, 119 Conn. App. 556, 568, 988 A.2d 393, cert. denied, 296 Conn. 902, 991 A.2d 1104 (2010); see also State v. Burnell, 290 Conn. 634, 642, 966 A.2d 168 (2009); State v. Culver, 97 Conn. App. 332, 336, 904 A.2d 283, cert. denied, 280 Conn. 935, 909 A.2d 961 (2006).

Further, the second Golding prong is met because a claim of a double jeopardy violation is of constitutional magnitude. The double jeopardy clause of the fifth amendment to the United States constitution provides that no person shall "be subject for the same [offense] to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb" U.S. Const., amend. V.

² "[A] defendant can prevail on a claim of constitutional error not preserved at trial only if all of the following conditions are met: (1) the record is adequate to review the alleged claim of error; (2) the claim is of constitutional magnitude alleging the violation of a fundamental right; (3) the alleged constitutional violation . . . exists and . . . deprived the defendant of a fair trial; and (4) if subject to harmless error analysis, the state has failed to demonstrate harmlessness of the alleged constitutional violation beyond a reasonable doubt." (Emphasis in original; footnote omitted.) State v. Golding, supra, 213 Conn. 239–40; see also In re Yasiel R., supra, 317 Conn. 781 (modifying third prong of Golding by eliminating word "clearly" before words "exists" and "deprived").

The third Golding prong is also met because in the present case, the trial court convicted and sentenced the defendant on separate charges of conspiracy to commit home invasion in violation of §§ 53a-48 and 53a-100aa (a) (1), and conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree in violation of §§ 53a-48 and 53a-59 (a) (4) that were based on a single conspiratorial agreement. “Whether the object of a single agreement is to commit one or many crimes, it is in either case that agreement which constitutes the conspiracy which the statute punishes. The one agreement cannot be taken to be several agreements and hence several conspiracies because it envisages the violation of several statutes rather than one. . . . The single agreement is the prohibited conspiracy, and however diverse its objects it violates but a single statute” (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Braverman v. United States, 317 U.S. 49, 53–54, 63 S. Ct. 99, 87 L. Ed. 23 (1942). “[U]nder Connecticut law; see, e.g., State v. Ortiz, 252 Conn. 533, 559, 747 A.2d 487 (2000); it is a double jeopardy violation to impose cumulative punishments for conspiracy offenses if they arise from a single agreement with multiple criminal objectives.” State v. Wright, 320 Conn. 781, 829, 135 A.3d 1 (2016). Here, both conspiracy convictions arose from the single agreement reached by the defendant, Joe Fox, Labbe, and Hart to enter the apartment and inflict serious injury to Esposito. Therefore, the charges in question arise out of the same act or transaction.

The fourth Golding prong is met because the state has failed to demonstrate that the alleged constitutional violation was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. To the contrary, the state has conceded that the two conspiracy convictions violate the double jeopardy clause of the fifth amendment. Although the sentence imposed for conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree did not lengthen the total effective sentence imposed in

192 Conn. App. 221

AUGUST, 2019

229

State v. Fox

this case; see footnote 1 of this opinion; other adverse consequences may result from the sentence. The Supreme Court has concluded that a cumulative conviction has “potential adverse collateral consequences”³ that can independently qualify as a punishment. (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Rutledge v. United States, 517 U.S. 292, 302, 116 S. Ct. 1241, 134 L. Ed. 2d 419 (1996).

When a defendant’s double jeopardy rights have been violated because the court has imposed multiple sentences for conspiracy offenses that arose out of the same agreement, the proper remedy is for this court to reverse the judgment of conviction for the lesser offense of conspiracy, remand the case to the trial court with direction to vacate the conviction for the lesser offense of conspiracy, and to resentence the defendant accordingly. See State v. Wright, supra, 320 Conn. 829 (holding vacatur of lesser conspiracy offense, rather than merger, was proper remedy in case involving multiple punishments for cumulative conspiracy convictions arising from single agreement);⁴ State v. Steele, 176 Conn. App. 1, 38, 169 A.3d 797, cert. denied, 327 Conn. 962, 172 A.3d 1261 (2017) (holding vacatur of lesser conspiracy offense, rather than merger, was proper remedy in case involving multiple punishments for cumulative conspiracy convictions arising from single agreement).

³ The United States Supreme Court recognized potential adverse collateral consequences stemming from cumulative convictions such as delaying a defendant’s eligibility for parole, increasing a sentence under a recidivist statute for a future offense, impeaching a defendant’s credibility, or stigmatizing the defendant. Rutledge v. United States, 517 U.S. 292, 302, 116 S. Ct. 1241, 134 L. Ed. 2d 419 (1996)

⁴ The court in Wright extended our Supreme Court’s holding in State v. Polanco, 308 Conn. 242, 61 A.3d 1084 (2013), which established vacatur as the proper remedy for double jeopardy violations resulting from the imposition of multiple sentences related to greater and lesser included offenses. State v. Wright, supra, 320 Conn. 829.

At oral argument, both parties agreed that it is not necessary to resentence the defendant because the requested remedy will not alter the defendant's total sentence. We agree that, while the trial court retains the authority to restructure the defendant's sentence if that court determines that doing so is necessary to retain its original sentencing intent, it is unnecessary for this court to remand the case to the trial court for resentencing because vacatur of the defendant's conviction and sentence for conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree will not alter his total effective sentence. See footnote 1 of this opinion; see also State v. Johnson, 316 Conn. 34, 42–43, 111 A.3d 447 (2015); State v. Steele, supra, 176 Conn. App. 38–39.

II

The defendant next claims that the state violated his right to due process under the Connecticut constitution as a result of the “destruction or loss” of photographs depicting the crime scene. Despite the fact that the defendant refers to the photographs as destroyed or lost, the state counters, and we agree, that the photographs exist, but are merely indiscernible. The state contends that the record is inadequate to review this claim because the trial court did not make any factual findings concerning the indiscernible photographs. In the alternative, the state argues that, even if the record is adequate for review, the defendant's claim fails because the defendant cannot show that a constitutional violation exists and deprived him of a fair trial. We disagree with the state that the record is inadequate to review the claim, but agree with the state that, although the record is adequate for review and the defendant raises a constitutional claim, his claim ultimately fails because the alleged constitutional violation does not exist and did not deprive the defendant of a fair trial.

The following facts are relevant to our conclusion. At trial, Nicole Hart testified to the following facts: Joe

192 Conn. App. 221

AUGUST, 2019

231

State v. Fox

Fox lived in the apartment with her for several weeks around October, 2014. Nicole Hart and Joe Fox ended their relationship around the second week of October, 2014, at which time Nicole Hart asked Joe Fox to leave the apartment and he moved out. Joe Fox took his belongings from the apartment and he did not have keys to the apartment or the main residence. Nicole Hart routinely locked the doors to her apartment and to her bedroom, “for sleeping purposes,” and the doors were locked on the night of October 26, 2014, when she and Esposito went to sleep in her bedroom.

On the night of October 26, 2014, Nicole Hart awoke to the sound of two loud bangs, followed by the defendant, Joe Fox, and Labbe entering her bedroom. While the defendant, Joe Fox, and Labbe were punching and kicking Esposito, Nicole Hart asked them what they were doing in her house and to leave. Following the incident at the apartment, Nicole Hart observed damage to the apartment’s entrance door and her bedroom door. Specifically, she observed that the apartment entrance door was “kicked in” and a screw was missing from the locking mechanism. She also observed that the right-hand frame of her bedroom door had broken during the incident and the bedroom door did not lock as of the time of trial.

Other witnesses testified as to the condition of the apartment entrance door and bedroom door following the incident on October 26, 2014. Erika Berrios, then girlfriend of Nicole Hart’s cousin, Christopher Hart, testified that Nicole Hart routinely locked and closed the apartment entrance door when she had visitors. Berrios further testified that the day following the incident, she observed damage to the apartment entrance door and noted that the lock was out of place. She also testified that Nicole Hart’s bedroom door was “completely . . . damaged” and not “even worth fixing.”

Thomas Hart testified that on the night of October 26, 2014, he observed Joe Fox trying to enter the apartment, but not being able to open the locked door. He further testified that he then left Joe Fox, entered the main residence, and subsequently heard a loud bang.

Anderson testified that he responded to the residence on October 26, 2014, following the incident, and observed damage to the apartment's entrance door and Nicole Hart's bedroom door. Specifically, he observed a broken door jamb and "some locking mechanism on the floor" with regard to the apartment's entrance door. With regard to Nicole Hart's bedroom door, he testified that it "looked like it was forced open," the door jamb was broken, and a locking mechanism was on the floor.

Susan Delgado, a Hart family friend and the sole defense witness, testified that the apartment entrance door was "never locked." She further testified that she spoke with Anderson by phone and went to the apartment the day following the incident and she did not observe damage to any of the doors in the apartment. On cross-examination, however, Delgado provided conflicting testimony regarding how many days following the incident she spoke with Anderson and visited the apartment.

Anderson testified to the following facts: As part of his investigation of the scene, he photographed relevant areas of the main residence and the apartment including the outside of the main residence, the entrance door to the apartment, the apartment bedroom door, the apartment bedroom, kitchen areas, and blood on the floor of the entryway to the apartment bedroom. For unknown reasons, some of the photographs Anderson took resulted in discernable images while others did not. Anderson noted, "[i]t's electronic equipment, sometimes it works, most of the time it works, but this time all the pictures did [not] come out." It was not until

192 Conn. App. 221

AUGUST, 2019

233

State v. Fox

a later date that Anderson realized that some of the photographs taken on October 26, 2014, did not “come out.” Three of the seven photographs taken by Anderson on October 26, 2014, were discernable and were entered into evidence as State’s Exhibits 6A, 6B, and 6C (photographs of blood on the floor of the entry-way to the bedroom, blood on Nicole Hart’s mattress, and exterior of the main residence, respectively).⁵ Anderson took the photographs of the main residence and the apartment using a police issued Nikon digital camera. He did not know how old the camera was and he did not know whether the camera had a memory chip. Anderson testified that he took the photographs according to procedure and he thought he performed diligently. Anderson also testified on cross-examination that he only takes the photographs at the scene, while an evidence technician at the ID bureau extracts the photographs from the camera and prints the photographs. On cross-examination, when asked whether someone could have deleted photographs of the doors in question, Anderson responded, “[t]hey could have, yes.” On redirect examination, Anderson reiterated that some of the photographs from October 24, 2016, did not come out and that he personally observed damage to both the apartment entry door and Nicole Hart’s bedroom door.

On the last day of the state’s case-in-chief, the defendant argued to the court that the state had failed to turn over all potentially exculpatory material in violation of Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215 (1963). Specifically, the defendant argued that the state, or other governmental agencies, failed to turn over a video recording of inventory of a vehicle seized in connection with the case. The defendant also argued that he was not aware that photographs taken at the scene were missing and that he should have been provided with the opportunity to review the memory card from the police department's digital camera, if one so existed. In response, the state argued that, during discovery, it had provided the defendant with the video recording of the vehicle, as well as the seven photographs taken at the scene on October 24, 2016.⁶ The state noted that three of the seven photographs, which presumably would have included images of the apartment doors, were "barely legible," did not "come out," and were "overexposed." At a later point in trial, the state described one of the photographs as "completely white," one as "completely dark," several as "grainy," and noted "that you can't see what they are." The state further noted that the photographs of the doors were not lost, rather, Anderson did not notice "until a later date that they did not come out." The state noted that it had provided all seven photographs to the defendant and that he had access to the ones that did not "come out."

⁵ The state also entered into evidence twenty-two photographs of the crime scene, which were taken at a later date following the October 24, 2016 incident. Anderson did not take the twenty-two additional photographs of the crime scene. The clarity of these photographs, State’s Exhibits 1A-1U and 3A, was not in dispute at trial.

The court noted that it was satisfied that the state had turned over all available evidence to the defendant, and that before the trial, the defendant was aware of the issue with the indiscernible photographs. Later in the trial, the court independently raised the defendant's claim of a Brady violation and again concluded that the defendant had received all evidence available to the state, that the defendant had the ability to cross-examine Anderson as to the indiscernible photographs, and that no Brady violation existed.

On appeal, the defendant claims that his conviction of home invasion and conspiracy to commit home invasion

⁶ The state entered into evidence only three of the seven photographs taken at the scene on October 26, 2014 (State's Exhibits 6A, 6B, and 6C).

192 Conn. App. 221

AUGUST, 2019

235

State v. Fox

violates his right to due process because the police failed to preserve potentially exculpatory evidence in the form of photographs of the doors of the apartment.⁷ It is not disputed that the defendant did not raise a due process violation at trial, and therefore the defendant seeks review of the unpreserved claim pursuant to State v. Golding, supra, 213 Conn. 239–40. See footnote 2 of this opinion.

Under the first Golding prong, we conclude that we have a sufficient record on appeal to consider the claim. Anderson testified at length about the photographs he took at the scene on October 26, 2014, and the fact that some of the photographs were indiscernible. He noted that he took photographs of the apartment’s entryway door and Nicole Hart’s bedroom door, but that neither of these photographs produced clear images. The defendant had ample opportunity to cross-examine Anderson as to the indiscernible photographs and did in fact question him at length about the camera used, the witness’s camera training, the procedure for extracting photographs from the camera, and the reason the photographs did not come out. In addition to both parties questioning Anderson, the court ruled on the defendant’s oral motion in which he claimed that he was not aware that some of the photographs taken at the scene were indiscernible and that he should have been given an opportunity to review the camera’s memory card. The court concluded that the defendant had access to all evidence in the possession of the state, and that the state had no further obligation to provide the defendant with information to which it did not itself have access. The state claims that the record is inadequate for review

⁷ At trial, the defendant claimed that, had the photographs been discernible, they could have been exculpatory because they may have shown lack of forced entry into the apartment. The state noted that forced entry is not an element of a home invasion claim. The court noted that the defendant had not provided any evidence in support of the fact that the photographs would have been exculpatory.

because the trial court did not weigh “the reasons for the unavailability of the evidence against the degree of prejudice to the accused.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Joyce, 243 Conn. 282, 301, 705 A.2d 181 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1077, 118 S. Ct. 1523, 140 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1998). We conclude, on the basis of the testimony adduced at trial and the trial court’s ruling with regard to the indiscernible photographs, that the record is adequate to review the claim and, therefore, the first Golding prong is met.⁸

The second Golding prong is also met because the defendant’s claim is of constitutional magnitude alleging the violation of a fundamental right. Specifically, the defendant claims a due process violation in derogation of his rights under article first, § 8, of the constitution of Connecticut.⁹

The defendant’s claim fails, however, on the third Golding prong because the defendant’s alleged due process violation does not exist and the defendant was not deprived of a fair trial. “With respect to a due process violation for failure to preserve under the federal constitution, the United States Supreme Court has held that the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment requires that a criminal defendant . . . show bad faith on the part of the police [for] failure to preserve potentially useful evidence [to] constitute a denial of due

⁸ In response to the defendant’s oral claim of a Brady violation, the court noted, “if they handed over the discovery and you fully reviewed the discovery, and you saw that there were not pictures, something that you felt was important, you didn’t address it with the state’s attorney?” The court further noted, “[y]ou have what they have. You have an explanation, you may not like what happened or you may feel that that’s wrong, you know, that you cross-examined the police officer as to how did it happen, why did it happen. You had that ability. You asked the questions. And so, I’m not left with any evidence of any type of Brady violations at this point in time.”

⁹ The due process clause provides in relevant part: “No person shall . . . be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law” Conn. Const., art. I, § 8.

192 Conn. App. 221

AUGUST, 2019

237

State v. Fox

process of law.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Smith, 174 Conn. App. 172, 182, 166 A.3d 691, cert. denied, 327 Conn. 910, 170 A.3d 680 (2017); see also Arizona v. Youngblood 488 U.S. 51, 57–58, 109 S. Ct. 333, 102 L. Ed. 2d 281 (1988).

In State v. Morales, 232 Conn. 707, 720–21, 657 A.2d 585 (1995), our Supreme Court rejected the federal bad faith requirement and instead held that, when a due process claim is advanced under the Connecticut constitution, our courts should employ the balancing test set forth in State v. Asherman, 193 Conn. 695, 724, 478 A.2d 227 (1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1050, 105 S. Ct. 1749, 84 L. Ed. 2d 814 (1985). In determining whether the reasons for the unavailability of the evidence outweigh the degree of prejudice to the accused, the Asherman test reviews the totality of the circumstances surrounding the missing evidence. State v. Morales, supra, 720–21. Specifically, the Asherman test considers “the materiality of the missing evidence, the likelihood of mistaken interpretation of it by witnesses or the jury, the reason for its unavailability to the defense and the prejudice to the defendant caused by its unavailability” Id., 722–23. The reason for the missing evidence’s nonavailability factor concerns the state’s involvement and the remaining three factors scrutinize the impact of the missing evidence on the trial. Applying this test, we conclude that the defendant’s right to due process under the state constitution was not violated.

The first Asherman factor is the materiality of the missing evidence. “The evidence is material only if there is a reasonable probability that, had the evidence been disclosed to the defense, the result of the proceeding would have been different.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Estrella, 277 Conn. 458, 485, 893 A.2d 348 (2006). On the other hand, “[t]he defendant’s mere speculation that the [lost evidence] could have been beneficial or not does not meet the standard necessary

238

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 221

State v. Fox

to prove materiality.” (Emphasis in original.) State v. Barnes, 127 Conn. App. 24, 33, 15 A.3d 170 (2011), aff’d, 308 Conn. 38, 60 A.3d 256 (2013).

Under this standard, the defendant cannot establish the materiality of the indiscernible photographs from the apartment. As a preliminary matter, the photographs in question were not lost or missing, but rather, the photographs of the apartment doors were indiscernible. The trial court ruled that the state turned over all evidence in its possession to the defendant, including the photographs that did not produce clear images. Nevertheless, the defendant contends that his conviction of home invasion and conspiracy to commit home invasion should be reversed and remanded as a result of the alleged due process violation.

In light of the language of the home invasion statute under which the defendant was convicted, there is not a reasonable probability that the result of the proceeding would have been different, even if the photographs were discernible. Section 53a-100aa (a) provides in relevant part: “A person is guilty of home invasion when such person enters or remains unlawfully in a dwelling” The express language of the statute does not require that the defendant enter the dwelling using force, or that he cause any damage upon entering. Nicole Hart’s testimony established that the defendant did not have permission to enter the apartment, and also that he remained unlawfully in the apartment on October 26, 2014, after she told him and the other perpetrators to leave. Although forced entry is not a necessary element to prove home invasion, evidence of forced entry may be probative of unlawful entry and, thus, three witnesses testified as to the damaged doors of the apartment. Even though the defendant’s witness, Susan Delgado, testified that the doors were not damaged, the defendant is incorrect in his assertion that had the photographs been discernible, the result of the

192 Conn. App. 221

AUGUST, 2019

239

State v. Fox

proceeding would have been different. The weight of the evidence presented at trial established that the defendant unlawfully entered or unlawfully remained in the apartment. We are not persuaded, in light of the evidence in its entirety and the essential elements of the offense, that there is a reasonable probability that had the photographs of the doors been discernible, the result of the proceeding would have been different.

“In further examining the materiality of potentially exculpatory evidence under the Asherman test, a critical factor that our courts have considered is the defendant’s lack of interest in the evidence.” State v. Morales, 39 Conn. App. 617, 625, 667 A.2d 68, cert. denied, 235 Conn. 938, 668 A.2d 376 (1995). “The fact that a defendant failed to request the evidence goes to the issue of materiality and whether the defendant deemed it significant.” State v. Morales, supra, 232 Conn. 712 n.7. Here, the defendant failed to raise the issue of the indiscernible photographs, or his ability to review the camera from which they were taken, until the last day of the state’s case-in-chief. Outside the presence of the jury, the defendant maintained that he did not learn of the missing photographs until Anderson’s testimony. The state, however, claimed that, during discovery, it had turned over all photographs to the defendant, including the three that were indiscernible. The prosecutor also claimed that he and the defendant had discussed the issue of the photographs “numerous times” prior to trial. The court ruled that it was satisfied that the state had turned over the evidence in its possession and that the defendant should have raised the issue during discovery, rather than on the last day of the state’s case-in-chief. Therefore, because there is not a reasonable probability that the evidence would have changed the outcome of the trial, and because the defendant showed a lack of interest in the evidence prior to trial, the defendant is unable to establish the materiality of the indiscernible photographs.

The second Asherman factor considers the likelihood of mistaken interpretation of the missing evidence by witnesses or the jury. Mistaken interpretation can be “minimized at the trial by permitting testimony on the issue” State v. Leroux, 18 Conn. App. 223, 233, 557 A.2d 1271, cert. denied, 212 Conn. 809, 564 A.2d 1072 (1989). In this case, the likelihood of mistaken interpretation of the missing evidence by witnesses or the jury is low. Anderson testified, on both direct and cross-examination, that he took photographs on the scene and that some of the photographs did not come out. Given the ample testimony regarding the missing photographs, the likelihood of mistaken interpretation by the witnesses or jury is low.

The third Asherman factor concerns the reasons for the nonavailability of the evidence, namely, the motives underlying the loss of the evidence. In analyzing this factor, courts examine “whether the destruction was deliberate and intentional rather than negligent . . . or done in bad faith or with malice . . . or calculated to hinder the defendant’s defense, out of other animus or improper motive, or in reckless disregard of the defendant’s rights.” (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Weaver, 85 Conn. App. 329, 353, 857 A.2d 376, cert. denied, 271 Conn. 942, 861 A.2d 517 (2004). Here, nothing in the record indicates that the state’s failure to preserve useful photographic evidence of the condition of the doors was the result of any bad faith or improper motive on the part of the state or law enforcement. Anderson testified that, as part of routine procedure, he took photographs of the main residence and the apartment, including the apartment entry and bedroom doors. He further testified that, for an unknown reason, some of the photographs did not come out, but that he had followed procedure and performed his duties

192 Conn. App. 221

AUGUST, 2019

241

State v. Fox

diligently. In ruling on the defendant's oral motion regarding the photographs, the court observed that the defendant had received all evidence available to the state, including any indiscernible photographs. Therefore, the defendant is unable to establish that the indiscernible photographs are the result of improper motive or animus on the part of the state.

The final Asherman factor concerns the prejudice caused to the defendant as a result of the unavailability of evidence. "In measuring the degree of prejudice to an accused caused by the unavailability of the evidence, a proper consideration is the strength or weakness of the state's case, as well as the corresponding strength or weakness of the defendant's case." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Joyce, supra, 243 Conn. 303. Under this analysis, the state had a strong case with regard to the home invasion claim. Nicole Hart testified that the defendant did not have permission to be in the apartment, that the doors were locked when she and Esposito went to sleep on October 26, 2014, and that she awoke to the sound of her doors being forcefully opened. Nicole Hart also testified that she told the defendant, Joe Fox, and Labbe to leave the apartment as they were punching and kicking Esposito. Further, she testified that her doors sustained physical damage on the night in question. In addition to Nicole Hart's testimony, Anderson, Thomas Hart, and Erika Berrios all testified that they observed physical damage to the doors of the apartment. Given the testimony of the state's witnesses, the state's case was strong with regard to whether the defendant unlawfully entered or unlawfully remained in the apartment. In contrast, the defendant presented one witness, Susan Delgado, who testified that she did not observe damage to the doors on the day following the incident. The defendant also extensively questioned Anderson on cross-examination as to the reason for the indiscernible photographs. As

242

AUGUST, 2019

192 Conn. App. 221

State v. Fox

a result of the foregoing evidence, we cannot conclude that the defendant was prejudiced as a result of the unavailable evidence.

For the foregoing reasons, we conclude that the defendant has failed to demonstrate that his right to due process under the Connecticut constitution has been violated by the state's failure to produce discernible photographs of the doors at issue.

III

The defendant next claims that the trial court erred in denying his request for an adverse inference jury instruction related to the failure of the police to produce discernable photographs of the apartment doors. We disagree.

The following additional facts are relevant to our analysis. At trial, the defendant filed a request to charge, including a proposed instruction as to the indiscernible photographs of the doorways and the investigation by the police as a whole. The proposed instruction read as follows: "Investigation which is thorough and conducted in good faith may be more credible while an investigation which is incomplete, negligent, or in bad faith may be found to have lesser value or no value at all. In deciding the credibility of the witnesses and the weight, if any, to give the prosecution evidence, consider whether the investigation was negligent and/or conducted in bad faith. If the police inadequately investigated one matter, you may infer that the prosecution also inadequately investigated other matters. Based on this inference alone you may disbelieve the prosecution witnesses and evidence. This may be sufficient by itself for you to have a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's guilt." The court heard from the parties before the defendant presented his witness, Susan Delgado, and noted that "I don't know if it was negligent or not that the picture didn't come out because there are no facts

192 Conn. App. 221

AUGUST, 2019

243

State v. Fox

underlying it. . . . I can't find an evidentiary basis to say that it's negligent that something didn't come out."¹⁰ After hearing from Delgado, the court revisited the defendant's adverse inference instruction request and noted that the defendant's requested instruction "would have to be based on some sort of evidence . . . that the police were negligent in some way. [Susan Delgado's] testimony does not in any way indicate anything about the police investigation really. . . . I'm going to decline giving that instruction. I just don't think there's any evidence there."

"[T]o prevail on appeal, [the defendant] must show both that the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to give the adverse inference instruction on the [missing evidence] and that it was more probable than not that the failure to give the requested instruction affected the result of the trial." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) State v. Johnson, 67 Conn. App. 299, 314, 786 A.2d 1269 (2001), cert. denied, 259 Conn. 918, 791 A.2d 566 (2002). "Although an adverse inference instruction may be appropriate under certain circumstances, a trial court is not required to give an adverse inference instruction in every case involving missing evidence." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Id.

We agree with the court's determination that no factual basis existed for the specific charge requested by the defendant. The record is devoid of any evidence that the police investigation was incomplete or that, in their investigation, the police had acted negligently or in bad faith. Anderson testified that the police department taught him how to take photographs using the camera. He further testified that his responsibilities did not include transferring the digital images for printing. Anderson testified that he followed procedure, believed he was diligent, and that sometimes the photographs from investigations did not come out. He also testified that part of his due diligence as a police officer includes ensuring that photographs have been taken by reviewing them. In this case, Anderson reviewed the photographs at a later date, at which point he realized three were indiscernible. The reason for the indiscernibility of the photographs remains unknown, but none of the evidence adduced at trial attributes their condition to an incomplete, negligent, or bad faith police investigation.

¹⁰ During the court's colloquy with defense counsel, the court asked whether the police have a duty to take photographs of a crime scene or if they can use their discretion. The court appeared to draw a distinction between whether the issue with the photographs was the result of negligent conduct by the police or whether it was attributable to unknown technical reasons, or in the court's words, a "technical snag." Defense counsel did not appear to have a response as to whether a mere technical failure was the cause of the indiscernible photographs, but responded that it was his position that the police, through their training and experience, have a duty to take and review on-scene photographs.

Even if we were to conclude that the court should have delivered the requested instruction, we are persuaded in light of the evidence as a whole that its failure to do so was harmless because the defendant has failed to show that it was more probable than not that the failure to give the requested instruction affected the result of the trial. The state's case included three eyewitnesses who testified that the apartment doors were damaged after the incident. Additionally, Nicole Hart and Esposito both positively identified the defendant as one of the intruders and perpetrators of the assault. In light of the ample evidence that the defendant entered and remained unlawfully in the apartment, had the court delivered the requested adverse inference instruction to the jury, we do not agree that it is more probable than not that the outcome of the trial would have been different. Accordingly, we conclude that the court did not err in denying the defendant's requested adverse inference jury instruction regarding the police investigation.

192 Conn. App. 221

AUGUST, 2019

245

State v. Fox

The judgment is reversed only as to the conviction of conspiracy to commit assault in the first degree and the case is remanded with direction to vacate the defendant's conviction of that offense. The judgment is affirmed in all other respects.

In this opinion the other judges concurred.
